This is not the first time CCT has proposed changes to local government. Two years ago, CCT sponsored the article that introduced the Town Manager form of government to Cohasset. CCT also spearheaded an article that requires negotiating units to give collective bargaining agreements to the advisory committee at least 30 days before town meeting. Last year, CCT won support for an article that requires the town to itemize tax bills, showing residents a breakdown of their municipal taxes.

Tanna Kasperowicz, clerk for CCT, pointed out that town officials have yet to hold a public hearing on any of her group's proposals. Public hearings are not required for citizens' articles.

"The things we're proposing are leading to serious changes in town government," Kasperowicz said. "Yet the selectmen are not planning public hearings. We would have liked them to get involved and take charge of this. People may not realize that we passed all our proposals, even the town manager act, without any public hearings."

The proposed article would not apply to the operating budget, or to Proposition 2-1/2 overrides which already have to go to the ballot. Jenkins said the article would apply to articles seeking money from free cash, the capital overlay fund, the stabilization fund, or through borrowing.

Some examples of the type of articles CCT is targeting include requests this year for $20,000 to buy thermal imaging cameras for the fire department, and $244,000 for air conditioning and driveway improvements at the schools.

Jenkins said all taxpayers should have a say in the way town officials spend money outside their operating budgets. Members of CCT are also sensitive to the need to prevent their article from burdening the town with implementation costs. Jenkins said CCT would like to see the questions placed on the annual town election so the town doesn't have to pay for a special election.

Kasperowicz said she thinks residents will respond positively to the proposal.

"Taxpayers want more control over their tax money, but they're busy," Kasperowicz said. "People are interested in their money. This proposal gives taxpayers a chance to think about the way their money is being spent, and then to vote on those proposals 30 days after town meeting."

Boards are split on Cohasset Plaza expansion dy warned that if times change, the plaza could turn into another Harborlight Mall.

"Let's keep this thing contained," he said, describing Cohasset Plaza as fully built out. "We have enough supermarkets, enough competition. We don't need it as a town."

Sturdy also described the zoning request as "spot zoning" although town counsel disagrees.

Reached by telephone Staszko said Stop & Shop has 30 years remaining on its 40-year lease so fears of a roller rink or Building 19 going in there, as voiced by Moore, are unfounded.

He also pointed out that in the village there is no space to accommodate a 30,000 square foot retail store.

"Zoning ought to have a permanence. One ought to be able to go to bed at night and not worry that something is going to go in next door."

— Planning board chairman Al Moore

"An additional retail business would be a plus and would not detract from the village district," Staszko said.

He said a new retail store would attract more visitors to Cohasset who might then decide to drive to the village or harbor area.

Staszko also disputed the expansion would exacerbate traffic problems. He said the light at King Street and the plaza has helped make the area safer than before.

The planners were also concerned that if Jane Cook's abutting property is sold to a developer of high priced homes then being next to an expanded plaza won't be a good selling point.

Selectmen said they were more concerned about the potential for large homes with families with several children who would drive the school costs up.

"For every dollar in taxes that a new home generates, $2 goes out," Selectman Merle Brown said.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the board had no reason not to look favorably on the request.

"A lot is being said that is alarmist," McMorris said. "But we saw Shaw's go in and that was no nail in the coffin of the village. Things are looking better in downtown Cohasset."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said plans are to expand the produce department at Stop & Shop with the expansion, something she can support.

Staszko estimates the expansion would bring in an additional $90,000 a year in tax revenue.

But the planning board said that shouldn't figure into the decision.

"We ought to make the right decision on zoning without that financial impact," Moore said. "If you follow that, then let's put high rises on the Common. That would bring in a lot of revenue."

Central sewer project comes in within budget

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild announced Tuesday the bids for the Central Cohasset project, which will involved 700 new connections, have come in within budget. "We're going to move forward as fast as we can," Guild said. "The contractors will be on a very tight schedule."

The combined low bids for the project totaled $10,531,560. The remaining money available out of the $13.2M appropriation is $10,562,700, leaving a balance of $31,140, Guild said.

P. Gioioso & Sons, Inc. of Hyde Park was the low bidder to do the work on the treatment plant, pipeline on Elm Street and harbor outfall. J. D'Amico, Inc. of Randolph was the low bidder on the other contract to install the collection system that includes the lines the streets and the stubs along the property lines.

Part of the original $13.2M appropriation was spent on installing sewer mains on Cushing Road and Pleasant Street for the Deer Hill School and the new Osgood School and on engineering and other fees, Guild said.

The bids were good news for the town which was forced to appropriate $2.7M more last fall to complete the North Cohasset project which came in 40 percent over initial estimates. The North Cohasset project involves 270 new connections.

An article has been placed on the March 27 town meeting warrant to ask for more money to finish the Central project if necessary. Now that article will focus on the $1.2M Lily Pond sewer project which was added to the Central project last October to comply with a court order. It is not clear if an override will be needed to pay for the Lily Pond project that includes 24 new connections, Guild said. This point will be resolved before the upcoming town meeting, however. Half the costs of both the North and Central sewer projects were covered by debt exclusions with the other half being paid by the users.

The Central project will be completed by June 30, 2000, Guild said.

Deadline for mooring damage

Town Manager Mark Haddad developed a procedure for claims of damage to moorings that occurred during their removal to facilitate the dredging project.

He said several mooring owners came forward with claims that their moorings were damaged during removal.

Under the procedure, the mooring owner must document all damage in writing, including a repair estimate, and file it with the harbormaster by April 16.

Haddad and Harbormaster John Winters will review each claim to determine why damage occurred and which party, if any, is responsible.

Haddad said the mooring owner is responsible for repairing his mooring. He said the mooring owner would be reimbursed for all repairs if the damage were due to negligence of the contractor.

Mill Bridge gets thumbs up

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said he met with a state engineer on March 1 to discuss the condition of the Mill Bridge on Border Street.

"We inspected underneath the bridge and Tom Allen commented that he wished all state bridges were in this good shape," Litchfield wrote in a March 5 memo to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Litchfield said town workers can chisel and clean up the deteriorated areas and patch with a new type of cement that is resilient to salt water.

"This type of work however, can only be done in warmer weather," Litchfield said. "Therefore, if the Board of Selectmen are willing to wait awhile, this project could be done without using Chapter 90 (state highway) funds."

ATLANTICA TO OPEN

Everyone is watching and waiting — for what, you ask? The grand opening of Atlantica, formerly The Chart House. All rumors are good ones, it looks dynamite, everything seems to be coming together! How nice!

Incidentally, it was learned during the Board of Health inspection of the Atlantica Restaurant at the waterfront, Monday, March 1, that the old pots, cutlery, dishes and utensils from former restaurants in the building have been largely replaced and all serviceable utensils have been given to Father Bill's shelter for the homeless in Quincy.

That certainly tells a lot about the caliber of the owner — Peter Roy, you are a caring, nice man who should be thanked time and time again for your time and efforts to make Cohasset what it once was! We applaud you!

COHASSET ARTISTS

Work by Cohasset artists JoAnne Chittick, Elizabeth Durant, Lisa Marder and Jack Nash has been accepted for inclusion in the Duxbury Art Association's 25th Annual Winter Juried Show. Chittick's and Durant's watercolors, "Maine Snapshots" and "Reaping," Marder's oil painting, "Directions," and Nash's three-dimensional piece, "Rising Phoenix," can be viewed at this impressive show at the Art Complex Museum in Duxbury until May 23. The museum is located on Alden Street, off Route 3A; hours are Wednesday through Sunday, 1-4 p.m.

LUCAS EXHIBITION

Would you like to know some more news from the art world? Well, you are cordially invited to an exhibition of paintings by Tom Lucas, "Realities and Illusions" at the Massachusetts College of Art, Alumni Gallery, 21 Huntington Ave., Boston, from March 18 through April 26. Tom did wonderful things, go and enjoy his marvelous work!

It is a mix of people, objects and scenes from various locations. Lynne has entitled it "Some of my Favorites," and the photos will hang through the end of March.

A WONDERFUL LADY

We are so happy to report this item about an unbelievable lady — Louise Smullen. Not only is she a kind, loving person, she has been bestowed with an honor that is long overdue — the Patriots Trail Girl Scout Council has placed her in their Court of Honor. She has been with the Girl Scout program in Cohasset for more than 39 years, and continues to support the program, the girls, and their councilors — she does it all! Louise even spends a lot of time telling the current Scouts "how it used to be," something they love to hear! Louise was one of 25 inductees inducted into the association, she is a valued member in the scouting community and most especially, our community! Hopefully, when you see her next time, you will be sure to tell her how valued a person she is — and how loved she is, too!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Fish can make your taste buds tingle!

It seems to be the time of year for all of us to think about what we eat — be it the fact that you are in the midst of Lent, trying to diet off excess winter pounds or just in the mood, it's time to think of fish. It seems that every time a fish recipe is revealed to you, you try it, like it, eat it!

Fish is usually a good buy at this time of the year, and a nice change from the traditional steak or chicken dish. It is good for you, low in calories and delicious! If you aren't a "fish lover," or really want a spicy shrimp dish, then try one of these recipes — guaranteed to please!

HERB-BRAISED FISH

1-1/2 pounds fillet — sole, haddock or flounder
1 medium onion, sliced
1 stalk celery, diced
4 slices lemon
3 tablespoons parsley, chopped
1/2 cup dry white wine
1/2 cup water
3/4 teaspoon celery salt
1 bay leaf
1/4 teaspoon thyme pepper
2 teaspoons cornstarch

Heat oven to 375 degrees. Place fish in a shallow baking dish and cover with all ingredients but cornstarch. Cover tightly with foil or lid, and bake 30 to 35 minutes. Remove fish to heated serving platter and thicken sauce with cornstarch, dissolved with a little cold water. This serves 4 generously, and is only 155 calories a serving!

SHRIMP REMOULADE

2 tbsps. corn oil
4 tbsp. wine vinegar
1 tsp. paprika
2 tbsp. prepared mustard
2 tbsp. prepared horseradish
2 tsp. Worcester sauce
1 tsp. salt
3/4 pound cooked shrimp
1/2 cup celery, thinly sliced
2 tbsp. onion, minced
2 tbsp. green pepper, finely chopped
lettuce cups

Beat first 8 ingredients together. Toss with shrimp and vegetables. Let marinade in the refrigerator at least 1-1/2 hours. Stir once or twice to distribute marinade. Drain marinade and serve shrimp in lettuce cups. Serves 4 (This is a really spicy dish designed for those who like things on the snappy side. Under 200 calories per serving)

I truly hope that you will like these two dishes, let me know what you think! Did your taste buds tingle? Hope so!

COLLEGE HONORS

Kristin Niessink, daughter of Deborah and Jan Niessink, is a member of the Saint Michael's College chapter of Delta Epsilon Sigma, the national scholastic honor society for students, faculty and alumni of colleges and universities with a Catholic tradition. Kristin is a senior biology major at the college. She is a C.H.S. graduate. Kristin is one of the 35 members and 25 new inductees at Saint Michael's College recently honored by Delta Epsilon Sigma. The society rewards students who show academic excellence, and dedication to intellectual activity and service work. Kristin maintained a cumulative grade point average of 3.60 or higher to be a member. The purpose of the society is to recognize academic accomplishments, to foster scholarly activities and to encourage a sense of intellectual community among its members. Congrats to you, Kristin!

ST. SEBASTIAN'S HONOR ROLL

St. Sebastian's School Headmaster William L. Burke III has announced that the following students from Cohasset have earned second-quarter and first semester honors: John Cotter, a ninth-grader, was named to the second-quarter honor roll, the first semester honor roll, and the second-quarter effort honor roll. John is the son of Dr. Paul and Margaret Cotter of Jerusalem Road. Michael Gillis, a 12th-grader, was named to the first-semester honor roll. Michael is the son of Stephen Gillis of Jerusalem Road and Barbara Gillis of Norfolk. Congratulations, gentlemen!

OPINION

Striking close to home

"In every child who is born, under no matter what circumstances, and of no matter what parents, the potentiality of the human race is born again; and in him, too, once more, and of each of us, our terrific responsibility toward human life; towards the utmost idea of goodness...."

These words by the writer James Agee strike close to home. Children are special for most of us. Most of us would without hesitation lay down our life for a child, any child. Consequently, anger boils up inside us when we learn that a grownup may have betrayed a child.

With each appearance of Weymouth resident Edward Demita on the television or each report of his alleged molestation of boys on the radio or on the pages of newspapers we want to lash out.

But even as new charges were being leveled against him, Demita, like all Americans, he is innocent until proven guilty. And he has denied all the allegations.

However, this riveting situation, involving 11 boys from at least five different families, has made all of us keenly aware of how important it is to inform our children their bodies belong to them. The hardest part, perhaps, is finding just the right tone to take so that our boys and girls aren't scared to have someone grab their hand as they cross home plate or pat them on the shoulder to acknowledge a job well done when a school paper with a B+ grade is returned.

We are becoming so conscious of the horror of molesting a child, a day care provider hesitates to put an arm around a tot arriving for the day.

It's too bad for youngsters to become so super-sensitive they shy away from anyone.

Children should be completely unselfconscious with everyone — parents, brothers and sisters, all family members and friends. They should not have to keep in mind the thought that something bad could happen to them whenever they go outside their homes.

It's a fact just one percent of men abuse the children of others. This does not take into consideration the fact that there are numerous cases where the abuse occurs within the family.

Children only need to be given a few simple rules to follow.

Don't let anyone touch you without a reason you understand, even your dad or mom.

Don't go off with someone you don't know or even with someone you know unless you tell your parents first.

Don't leave home by yourself. Go with friends.

At the same time, it's important to make sure boys and girls understand they have a right to always feel comfortable and at ease .

They should feel equally at ease at home, at school, on the sidewalk, in the playground, on the baseball diamond, on the skating rink, on the soccer field.

Yes, we grownups must be sure our children are feeling secure wherever they are.

We must find a comfortable ground. Protective but not paranoid.

No doubt about it, as the United Nations Declaration so eloquently declares: "Mankind owes to the child the best it has to give."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

More programs don't work

TO THE EDITOR:

With regard to the letter of Nancy Hurtig which mischaracterized my position on many so-called health education programs in the schools: at no point did I say that we should "throw in the towel or give up" on the issues. What I did say, was that the school programs create more problems. Common experience as well as statistics indicate that things are not better. The solution of Planned Parenthood and many liberals is to throw more money and more programs at the students.

There can be no solution until people recognize that taxpayers' money and more programs simply will not work.

Support for state library funding urged

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners (MBLC) requested $160 million in capital bond funds to be spent over eight years for the construction and expansion of public library buildings throughout the Commonwealth. Under this proposed legislation, funding would be provided for 22 libraries which are currently on the Board's waiting list of approved projects. In addition, funding would be made available for nearly 30 communities ready to submit project proposals for new library construction. Cohasset is one of these communities.

If the Library Construction Bill, #S. 1455, passes, the state will pay for a full one-third of construction costs — cities and towns are required to pay two-thirds of the cost. As The Boston Globe stated in a recent editorial, "Gold bricks in the walls of civilization, public libraries in Massachusetts have gotten a bum's rush on state funding . . . as suppliers of books, ideas, videos, Internet access and dreams of what could be, public libraries deserve the state's generous support."

The Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are asking for the support of Cohasset residents by suggesting that any registered voter in our community who wants to offset the cost of our new town library, write to: Senator Mark Montigny, Chairman, Ways and Means, Rm. 212, State House, Boston, MA 02133, asking that he and his colleagues approve Bill #S. 1455. We hope that all in our community agree, passage of this state bill is to the benefit of our entire town.

Patience G. Towle, Chair
Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library

Reminder for all Cohasset citizens

Please mark your calendars and remember to attend and vote at Town Meeting Saturday, March 27. The General Override this spring addresses our schools and other town related services.

Babysitting will be available during Town Meeting. Those interested should call either Sarah Markert (6124) or Eileen Hart (0168) in order to preregister for this service.

Election Supper is March 26

Come meet Cohasset candidates running for office, at the Beechwood Congregational Church at 6:30 p.m. on March 26. Enjoy dinner prepared by the church. Roast pork will be served. Tickets are $7.99 for adults and $3.50 for children and should be reserved by called 383-1066.

Sturdy wants village station

Town manager Mark Haddad reported to selectmen that planning board member Robert Sturdy was not speaking on behalf of the planning board when the contacted the MBTA about a village location for the Greenbush train station. Haddad said that he spoke with Al Moore, chairman of the planning board, who said that Study was speaking for himself, but that the planning board, in general, agrees with what Sturdy told the MBTA.

School management practices need work

Part VI: administrative gridlock: lost opportunities

"As we enter the last decade of the 20th century, Cohasset Junior/Senior High School . . ."

The preceding is the opening statement from the Cohasset Middle School-High School Program of Studies for school year 2000, that was just sent home to parents. Last I heard, the rest of the world is feverishly working on Y2K and challenges of the 21st century. Job descriptions and policies that haven't had meaningful updates in 20 years, an archaic budget process, almost non-existent use of computer technology (and the list goes on) do not bode well for students and taxpayers.

THE WAY I SEE IT

JOE MCELROY

Basic management practices are simply absent. Management of the mini bus fleet is poor to atrocious. Inadequate planning and lack of control on major field trips has been chronic. A budget calendar for tracking spending trends and preparation of the annual operating budget does not exist. Publications of faculty and student handbooks, school improvement plans, and annual goals do not occur in logical sequence if they happen at all. State law requires the School Committee's annual approval of student handbooks, but it does not happen. The Deer Hill Student Handbook is two years out of date. None of the School Improvement Plans had been submitted to the School Committee before the beginning of the 1998-99 school year. This year, the School Committee did its goal-setting at least six months late. Last year, it didn't make periodic progress reviews. Lip service is paid to strategic planning and nothing more. The latest Strategic Plan is dated October 1995, lacks a financial component and hasn't been updated.

Although asked to, the School District fails to identify its audio-video equipment needs for Media-One contract negotiations. As a result, the School District doesn't get allocated free equipment and no one seems to know why. The answer is obvious: if you do not ask — you do not get. The record of accomplishment of Cohasset on securing grants is abysmal and it is not solely because Cohasset is an affluent community.

Why are Cohasset School District management practices so deficient? Yes, demands of the federal and state hierarchy have multiplied faster than local administrators can cope. However, the Cohasset School District also does not know how to make the most of its available resources. If the Superintendent, principals and staff and faculty learn how to efficiently use technology, they will be amazed at the quantum leap in their productivity. The Superintendent and principals desperately need the extra time realized through improved productivity. In particular, they need to spend more time evaluating teacher performance, mentoring and encouraging professional development that is sadly under-funded. In isolated instances, they must meticulously document nonperformance as a precursor to the frequently litigious process of dismissal. Instead, the School Committee has chosen to use $9,000 early retirement incentives to encourage departures. We have it backwards. We need to increase starting salaries to attract the best and the brightest. What is the cost to a student to be assigned to a poor teacher for an entire school year? What is the cost to "carry" the few poor teachers in any school system for years and perhaps entire careers? The answer to both questions is "devastating."

The Cohasset School Committee should periodically be meeting with neighboring school committees, the Hull Charter School, SS Vocational-Technical School, and SS Collaborative to exchange views. Let's explore the possibility of the Chairperson of the Board of Selectmen wearing two hats; i.e., to also serve as the Chairperson of the School Committee. This is not a radical concept; city mayors are designated as school committee chairpersons so that the "right and left hands" work together. Such a change would greatly improve communications between the "Town-side" and the "School-side." Understandably, school committee members are "advocates" and are unlikely to fully enroll in balancing resources among all town priorities. Maybe we can end up with "One-side, a Win-Win."

Do not misunderstand, nearly all of the Cohasset School District staff and faculty are talented and very hard working. The system has simply lost its ability to react because of excessive demands placed upon it, decades of inertia, and advocates who do not appreciate that good management should be embraced by both liberals and conservatives. A great starting place would be for the School Committee to rededicate itself to its four major responsibilities established by the Education Reform Act of 1993: a. Policy, b. Budget, c. Performance Standards and d. Establishing goals and objectives. Improved management will give the School Committee and District administrators the opportunity to focus on education priorities while giving "bang for the buck."

This is the sixth column in an eight-part series by former school committee member Joseph McElroy, who is speaking as a private citizen and not for the school committee.

Brace yourselves for school uniforms

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was in the eighth grade at the Thomas A. Watson School and ice covered most of the earth, my father hit the number. There wasn't much prize money involved but I got a pair of "sharkskin" pants out of the deal.

(There's a word you don't hear anymore. They weren't actually made from the skin of sharks. Rather, they were made of a particularly shiny cloth that held a crease even through the rough and tumble of a school recess.)

There were no uniformed gangs in my town in the '30s. Oh, there was a couple of guys who did their intimidating and menacing in knickers, which is a pretty difficult trick.

Of course, I wore my new sharkskins to school the next day. It was the only time I wore them to school. At recess, I was laughed out of the schoolyard for my pretensions. I went back to the unofficial uniform of the Thomas A. Watson School in the '30s — a shirt and pants from the Enterprise Store in Quincy.

I call it "unofficial" because the teachers, the principal (a Mr. Libby in this case) and the school board had nothing to do with it. It just happened that way and, when it did, the kids themselves enforced it.

Now I see that Gov. Cellucci has filed a bill that would require students at public schools in Massachusetts to wear uniforms in the name of discipline and bring law and order back to classrooms from P'town to Pittsfield.

"When rival gangs show up at the school, decked out as if they were dressed to do battle, clothes can intimidate and instill a sense of fear," he said. "When clothes create a menacing environment within a school, that also makes it harder to read and to write and to think."

(There were no uniformed gangs in my town in the '30s. Oh, there was a couple of guys who did their intimidating and menacing in knickers, which is a pretty difficult trick. I'd name them here but they may still be around and come over to the house and beat me up.)

The official Cellucci uniform likely would be khaki pants and a dress shirt complete with tie. All the schools in the state would be required to have a uniform policy but some districts could opt out on a vote of the local parent council.

We haven't heard yet from the ACLU but Sarah Wunsch, an attorney with CLUM (Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts), ventured the guess that Cellucci's proposal "may be a violation of their (the kids') rights."

"It's a way to avoid dealing with the real issues of education," she told the Boston Herald. "The hallmark of education has not been to regiment students to look alike or think alike."

The ACLU, for good or evil, has always had a militant concern for the rights of youngsters under a school's dress or speech codes — unless they come to school naked. That hasn't come up yet, but don't hold your breath.

Not too long ago, the ACLU was at the barricades with a youngster somewhere in the Midwest who claimed that ceremonial knife he brought to school every day was a requirement of his Sikh religion.

I'm waiting for the day when some kid tells his teacher that the Uzi he's carrying is just another bead in his Rosary.

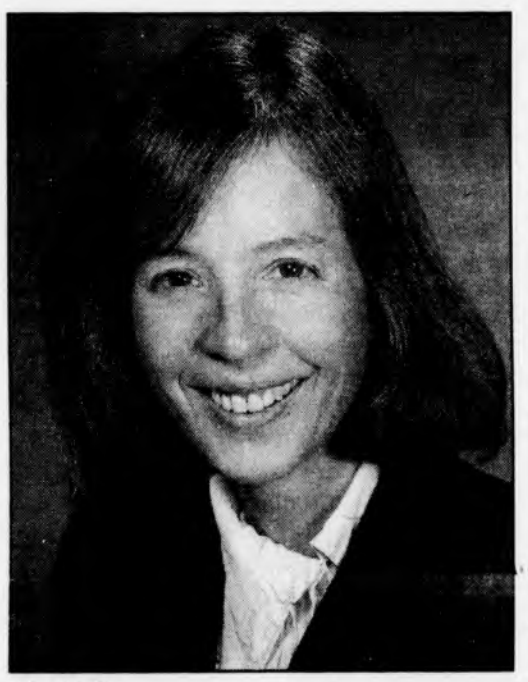
Robin Lawrence

Lawrence announces candidacy for Board of Health

Robin Lawrence, an experienced public health professional, is a candidate for election to the Cohasset Board of Health. "I have worked at the national and state levels and believe it is time to bring my expertise to the community where I have lived with my family since 1973," Lawrence said. He resides at 15 Beach St. with his wife, a public school teacher, in a neighboring town.

Dr. Lawrence is a graduate of Columbia College with a Bachelor of Arts degree, Columbia University School of Dental and Oral Surgery with a Doctor of Dental Surgery degree, and the University of Michigan School of Public Health with a Master of Public Health. He served in the U. S. Navy, including an assignment with a Marine infantry battalion in Vietnam. Lawrence was the senior U.S. Public Health Service executive with authority for the New England region prior to his retirement in 1996. Presently, he provides public health, oral health and primary care consulting services to the public, private, and not-for-profit sectors as a principal of a health care consulting firm. Dr. Lawrence serves on the Boards of the Sandy Beach Association, the Cohasset Maritime Institute, and the Hull Lifesaving Museum.

"Waste disposal issues, specifically on-site systems and central sewering, currently occupy a significant level of the Board of Health's energy. There are, however, other less emotional public health functions that require attention: water purity and quality, air quality, food protection, tobacco control, animal and insect control, hazardous materials disposal, communicable disease reporting, etc. I have the education, background and experience to make the correct decisions in guiding the Board of Health's efforts in protecting the community's public health and safety," Lawrence said.



Nan Roth

Roth seeks second term as selectman

Selectman Nan (Nancy A.) Roth of Highland Ave. has announced her candidacy for re-election to a second term.

Mrs. Roth and her husband Dennis have lived in Cohasset for 14 years. They have three sons ages 14,12 and 9. Roth previously served on the Advisory Committee for six years, and was Chairman for four. During the past year Roth has been Vice Chairman of the Board of Selectmen.

Over the past three years Mrs. Roth has continued to focus her energy on effective and accurate financial planning as Cohasset town government has moved successfully to a Town Manager form of government.

Roth has stated, "I believe that I have the knowledge, energy and skill to provide leadership to the citizens of Cohasset. We must plan for the future of Cohasset in the next century and address the pressures of development, economic, environmental and transportation needs in a comprehensive and careful manner."

Mrs. Roth has had a long career in education. Starting as a special needs teacher at the Manville School of Judge Baker Guidance Center, she moved on to coordinate out of district special needs placements for the Brookline Schools, followed by three years as Assistant Director of the Masters in Management of Human Services program at the Heller School of Brandeis University, and a stint as a grantwriter for the State Department of Education. For the past eight years, Mrs. Roth has focused her professional efforts on teaching reading to severely dyslexic students.

Mrs. Roth has a degree in biology from Middlebury College, a master's degree in education from Lesley College, and a master's degree in management of human services from the Heller School at Brandeis University.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen:
It has been said that the 30-year-old Benjamin Report makes for little more than interesting conversation over cocktails. What makes you think the town's new master plan won't be another waste of time and money?

SELECTMAN/ Nan Roth

Over the past 38 years since the Benjamin Report, a long-range plan for Cohasset, was published in 1961, Cohasset's population, wealth, home values and land use alternatives have changed. These developments require town planning in order to avoid pressures on town services and budgets that are beyond our means to provide.

A new Master Plan is needed to address the impact of these changes, and it must focus on a shared vision for Cohasset in the next century in terms of land use, housing and business development, and changes in town services. We must understand what Cohasset might look like if every possible lot were developed, consider effects of building sewers in parts or all of town and changing private ways to public streets. We must try to avoid the "rip down phenomenon" seen in other towns, as small farmhouses are replaced with huge mansions covering large percentages of each lot. The impact of development on schools, water, police, fire, programs for the elderly and other town services must be considered. We must plan to encourage environmentally sound business in appropriate locations, address traffic problems and revitalize our downtown business area in an attractive inviting manner.

An effective plan will include a program for implementation and a plan for funding in coordination with long term financial plans for the town. The completion of this plan will enable the town to qualify for a variety of grant programs. Components of the plan will be clearly presented to Town Meeting and Selectmen and planners will ensure that programs move forward and are not set aside as in 1961.

Cohasset is at a turning point. Only careful planning will allow Cohasset to protect and preserve its special beautiful and diverse community while we adapt to changes in the next century.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

Spending taxpayer and volunteer time should never be undertaken without sufficient need. One master plan collecting dust is enough. However, past failure shouldn't prevent wise action today. Planning is the way that individuals, families and businesses successfully set and meet their goals. By applying "intelligent forethought" town planning can enable a community to be the best possible place to live. Unlike the Benjamin Report, where a consultant told Cohasset what to do, today's planner can help our community identify the characteristics it values. The process requires wide public participation to identify what we want to preserve and what we want to enhance. The plan sets priorities and identifies associated costs.

Recently, Cohasset prepared an open space plan, one component of a master plan. Although costing money, that plan enabled the town to receive state funding to purchase Turkey Hill; it was a wise expenditure. The Town ahs flexibility to undertake some or all of the other components as funds permit. Priority areas might be traffic and circulation; as pedestrian safety and traffic speed and volume increasingly concern residents. Review of the zoning bylaw to further protect natural resources, small town character and valued open space may be another; as well as services and housing opportunities for a growing senior population.

We know the cost of not planning. We are now paying for an accumulation of delayed capital projects. Planning will keep us focused, prepared; an active player in the future. It's an intelligent investment.

SELECTMAN/ Fred Koed

It's easy, almost 40 years after its publication, to criticize the town's first and only master plan, the Benjamin Report published in 1962 by the Planning Board. The report made various projections about growth and development given different scenarios for future zoning restrictions and land use controls.

It's easy to downplay some of the report's findings, but that misses the point. The Benjamin Report served Cohasset well. At a critical time in our development the study, written by land use planner Allen Benjamin, showed Cohasset a possible future of rapid growth we rightly choose to avoid. Without a continuing effort to strengthen our conservation, watershed protection, wetland and zoning bylaws during the subsequent three decades, Cohasset would not have preserved the character and resources we cherish today.

The Planning Board that started to lobby for the master plan in the late 1950s gave the town two other important legacies — our first zoning bylaw, and our first multi-year capital budget plan. Those Cohasset leaders demonstrated that master planning is a way to comprehensively think about our overall quality of life. By doing so we can become active stewards of our future.

It's time that the town shows the foresight to conduct another comprehensive master plan. We need to do so with the type of open public debate, full citizen input, and cooperative communication between all town boards and commissions that has been sadly lacking of late. We owe nothing less to the Cohasset we all love so much.

Health board:
Do you think the town's taking over the sewage treatment facility at 100 Pond St. Is a good idea?

HEALTH BOARD/ Robin M. Lawrence

The proposal for the acquisition of the sewage treatment facility at 100 Pond St. by the town has been explored in detail with respect to its technical, community and financial merits. The 15-year-old system has been meticulously maintained, is in excellent condition, and would not require significant repairs in the next 10 years, according to a report from the engineering consulting firm Camp Dresser & McKee.

Town operation of the facility would remove 100 Pond St. properties from the possible hook-up to the Central Wastewater Treatment Plant, accordingly providing availability of additional connections to that plant. The facility also has enough capacity to accept the connection of a failed system at an adjacent condominium complex, thereby mitigating a public health threat. Property owners connected to the facility would be billed for usage identical to those connected to the Central Wastewater Treatment Plant [i.e., same quarterly charge plus same per-gallon charge based upon water usage] and costs associated with future repair or upgrade would he shared equally by all connectees.

Local solutions to local problems are implicit in the long-term town goal of decentralized wastewater management. Based upon the available information to date, the acquisition of the sewage treatment facility at 100 Pond St. by the town appears to be a responsible decision.

HEALTH BOARD/ Charles Sturdy

The board of health has recently discussed a proposal that the town take over the maintenance and operation of the shared septic system currently owned and operated by the condominiums at 100 Pond St. As part of this proposal, the town would then be able to connect a few nearby properties with failed septic systems to the 100 Pond St., shared system.

I agree that this proposed solution is an excellent means of alleviating the health problem presented by these failed systems and I support this proposal in concept and shared systems generally. Shared systems are both more efficient to operate and a more effective means of treating waste water than conventional, single-home septic systems. However, my support for shared systems is conditioned on the consent of each of the property owners selected to participate in a shared system.

In the case of the 100 Pond St, the shared septic system belongs to the condominium owners and represents an indeterminate portion of the value of each of their properties. As much as this proposal may represent the optimal solution from a societal viewpoint to the problem nearby, it is not the only solution and I believe that these property owners should ultimately have the right to determine whether or not their shared septic system is taken over by the town.

School committee:
Due to the size of the school, could there be cost savings in scaling back the number of extracurricular sports offered at the middle-high school?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Betsy Connolly

Extracurricular athletic programs offer students lessons that last a lifetime. They learn individual skills, enrich talents, and acquire the tools needed to work as team members. Students develop pride, responsibility, and a sense of accomplishment. During these very difficult times for teens, Cohasset's youth are able to choose a healthy alternative to hanging around town thanks to our athletic programs.

Cohasset Middle School has recently been recognized by the State for it's remarkable athletic opportunities for students. With around 200 students enrolled in the Middle School, 112 participated in sports last spring, 133 this past fall and 100 students were on Middle School teams this winter. Coaches follow strict guidelines related to academic achievement and students are motivated to make the grade.

For our high school students, participation in athletic programs builds character. Athletes juggle homework, jobs and personal commitments. Cohasset High has had at least one-third of its students participate in sports during each season for the past year. Students and teams have been recognized within the region and state for their accomplishments. Due to financial restraints, students pay user fees, parents drive smaller teams to events, our gymnastic team merged with Norwell, and parents, businesses and community members are continually asked for support.

We are fortunate to have high achieving students who are also committed athletes. I believe that whatever cost savings might be realized by cutting a sport will only end up as an expenditure somewhere else.

Thank you,
Betsy Connolly
383-1248

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Stephanie Noble

The roster of sports offered at the Cohasset Middle/High Schools should be varied enough to attract a vast majority of students and realistic enough to make the investment a wise one.

The administration is doing a good job balancing these two objectives. And it is not an easy task in a constrained budget environment. Two recent observations would support this assessment. At the most recent school committee meeting, John Delorenzo offered a very pragmatic explanation of the sailing program at Cohasset High School — pointing out that while enrollment was low, the cost to the town was minimal. Because the program has no impact on the budget there is no fiscal reason to eliminate it. Mr. Delorenzo's understanding of this small line item told me that the administration had reviewed this item carefully and could speak to its existence in an objective factual manner.

My second observation on the administration's ongoing assessment of its sports programs was a signup sheet given to sixth-graders last spring asking them to indicate their sports preference by season. As a result of this survey, girls softball was eliminated at the middle/high school. Having coached recreational softball for four years, I was disappointed that those formative years would never result in a Cohasset team effort. However, I understand and support the decision.

Sports programs are often touted as a panacea for all of society's ills. While falling short of that mark, these programs do foster invaluable life lessons and lend a sense of community to all who participate. Money wisely spent on the sports program is money wisely invested.

He is also author of the "Gregorian Chant Handbook" and is known for his chant workshops.

Anti-defamation league hosts interfaith family seder

Sunday March 21, Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham will be the site of the Fourth Annual South Shore Family Interfaith Seder. The Passover Seder celebrates the exodus of the Jewish people from slavery in Egypt. The message of hope, liberation and freedom, however, is universal. The synagogue is located at 1112 Main St., in Hingham and the Seder will begin at 3 p.m. All members of the South Shore community are invited to join in the festivities.

The Seder will be led by Rabbi Stephen Karol with assistance from his colleagues in the Hingham-Hull Religious Leaders Association. Many South Shore organizations have come together to sponsor this event, including; Glastonbury Abbey; Temple Beth Shalom, Hull; New North Church, First Parish in Hingham Unitarian Universalist-Old Ship Church, St. John the Evangelist Episcopal Church; Union Church, Temple Shirat Hayam of Duxbury, House of Prayer Lutheran Church, Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Second Parish Church, First Baptist Church, New Community Church, Wellspring MultiService Center, First Church of Christ, Scientist, and St Paul's Catholic Church.

"We believe that by coming together for events like this, we are learning invaluable lessons about one another. Building bridges of understanding between different faith communities is an integral part of our mission", ADL Assistant Director , Kelly Alpert Vest said.

ADL South Shore Advisory Committee Chairs, Barbara and Mitch Marcus said that each year the number of sponsors increases as do the number of attendees.

COHASSET SPORTS

Race attracts top field

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

As of Tuesday, the pre-registration numbers for the 23rd Annual Cohasset Roadrace By-The-Sea 10K were down by about 50 runners as compared to last year.

But race director Roy Fitzsimmons isn't worried. The man who has been with the popular event since its inception believes Mother Nature has everything to do with the smaller number of pre-applicants for the March 28 race.

"People don't like to see the snow," said Fitzsimmons. "Last year, we had 300 pre-registered at this point. It's just the snow. On a nice bright day we should have a flock of runners."

The Cohasset race, recognized by New England Runner Magazine as one of the most scenic in the six states, has a reputation for the majority of its runners entering on the day of the race.

Fitzsimmons said this year will be no different. He expects between 800-1,000 runners to break from the starting line near Cohasset Common for the 1 p.m. start.

Fitzsimmons calls the race a "rite of spring" in the town. And for good reason. The challenging 10K (6.2 mile) event attracts scores of town residents to the picturesque common. And though it has a major sponsor this year in the Reebok company, 40 local businesses also back the race. Fitzsimmons sees the local backing of the various businesses in town as one of the race's greatest strengths.

"When I started this, I wanted to get as many of the local businesses involved as I could," he said. "This has really become a community effort. The people who live along the race route support it and have a good time."

The first and last mile are the two flattest of the course, making for a fast start and finish. The final two miles of the race roll downhill and then flatten out as runners get closer to the common.

It's the middle miles that wear out even the most hardened road runners and truly give the race its distinct charm.

The Jerusalem Road section, easily the most scenic with the Atlantic Ocean to the right, can be unforgiving when cold, raw winds blow into the runners' faces. In warm weather, the sea breeze is a welcomed relief.

The middle miles are punctuated with rolling hills leading to the grind up Forest Ave., near the four-mile mark. The finish line is in front of the town hall.

For those who don't want to run the 10K course, the annual walk over the same route gets under way at 10 a.m. The walk starts at Sandy Beach and follows the same route.

The walk was a huge success last year, drawing a field of 250.

Registration fee for the race is $12 before March 23 and $15 after.

Registrations will be held at the South Shore Community Center from 9 a.m. to noon March 27 and 28. For more information, call (781) 383-2811.

Baseball's fun in the Florida sunshine

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Before his death in 1989, former baseball commissioner and president of Yale, A. Bartlett Giamatti wrote of baseball: "It's designed to break your heart. The game begins in the spring, when everything else begins again, and it blossoms in the summer..."

Giamatti was widely respected in both professions; his regimes brought good times to both institutions and, apart from his decision to ban Pete Rose from baseball, Giamatti was relatively free of controversy.

With one exception. In the above passage, which goes on to discuss both summer and autumn and their relation to the national pastime, Giamatti devotes relatively little space to the concept of spring in baseball.

To most casual fans, spring training means a time when an equipment truck makes headlines by heading south in mid-February, a time when overweight, overpaid stars gripe about meal money, and, not often enough, the beginning of a whole summer of on-field brilliance, of pennant races, of baseball.

Among the scores of books written about baseball, one, William Zinsser's Spring Training, is solely about the six weeks when snow still falls in the North, but the Boys of Summer hone their skills in the sunshine of Florida and Arizona.

I was lucky enough this past weekend to catch a little of this spring training, as my father and I made a long-awaited trip, a pilgrimage you might say, to Fort Myers, Florida, to watch our Red Sox in action.

While much of Fort Myers is a cheesy blend of fast-food joints (of which Dad and I sampled only a few, I swear) and sunglass huts, City of Palms Park is a gem of a ballpark. Seating a sparse 6,690, the field's outfield fences are lined with palm trees; the Sox have found a great spot to brush the dust off.

It's a half-hour from Sani Bel, so Dad and I trekked out twice and dined at a few of the local eateries.

Players take batting practice just yards away from "snowbird" fans, often fanatics who can't wait for early April to catch their BoSox in action. Before games, sometimes even during games, players take time to chat with the fans.

Bret Saberhagen and I swapped injury reports, his major reconstructive surgery appearing a tad more distressing than my hangnails and soreness.

Lou Merloni, before making a strong showing in a game against Curt Schilling and the Phillies, signed autographs right up until the "Star-Spangled Banner." Maybe best of all, Dan Duquette was nowhere in sight.

Somehow, spring training even manages to present the commercial in a folksy way.

In between innings of the Sox-Twins games, local businesses staged stunts like a race between two women to see who could most quickly don the uniform of the company's employees and sprint to the finish line.

Half-innings were no longer opportunities to finish off the peanuts and chat with the couple next to you, trying to figure out what life-saving steps you'll take once they both begin choking to death on their fourth round of double deluxe bratwurst.

Instead, you can watch on the along the first base line as kids in those nifty inflatable sumo wrestler outfits grapple with each other.

There are some drawbacks. Equipped with state-of-the-art sound equipment, both parks I went to (the Twins' game took place just a 15- minute ride away) insisted on pumping out pop hits, songs so irrelevant to the game that they're distracting. The occasional "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" and, every once in a while, John Fogerty's "Centerfield" are tolerable, but Fiona Apple and KC and the Sunshine Band somehow detract from the game. To me, anyway. And my father was just short of apoplectic when Hanson's "Mmmmmbop" interfered with the melodic strains of batting practice.

Giamatti was a lifelong Sox fan. He knew of what he spoke when he mentioned the bit about the heartbreaking. His remark about spring being the time of new beginnings was also pretty much on the mark. Giamatti, though, failed to touch on spring training as a fantastic preface to the game of summer. For the players, it's a good time to get in shape and whine about contracts.

For the writer's, it's paradise, a feeding frenzy of meaningful quotes and fat ballplayers.

But I think spring training was invented for the fans. Just looking around at the hundreds of fans who showed up two hours before a spring training game, was enough, for me, to realize why this game has people across the world so enamored in its essence.

It is truly a timeless game, free of shot clocks and whistles and buzzers. Zinsser called baseball one of the four great American myths, right alongside the Mississippi River, the Civil War, and Abraham Lincoln. I can't speak about the other three, but baseball

If you can swing it, head down to Florida next year. And go with somebody who can enjoy it with you. The trip would have been fun without my Dad. But it was a great trip with him.

Bratwurst and Fiona Apple aside.

Baseball clinic to be held

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for an April vacation, four-day, baseball clinic to be conducted by the South Shore Baseball Club.

The clinic will be held at Barnes Field North Main Street, Cohasset, Wednesday, April 20, through Friday, April 23, from noon to 3 p.m. and costs $85 per player for the session.

Those interested may register at the Cohasset Recreation Office, First Floor Town Hall, and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset.

Space is limited, hence, early registration is advised. For further information call the office at 383-4109.

Sign up for Stars

The South Shore Seahawks split last year and now consists of two youth hockey programs. The Coastal Stars is for the towns on Marshfield and Cohasset, while the South Shore Seahawks includes Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

There will be a sign up on Saturday, March 20 from noon to 5 p.m. at the Scituate Library.

The sign-ups include all age groups listed:

IT'S HAPPENING

Donations sought for post prom party

The parents of the CHS senior class students are currently working on a [illegible] prom all night celebration. Due to overwhelming attendance at last year's event, it was decided to go forward with the second such event this year. Not only was it reportedly fun filled and action packed, it was a great way to keep the prom-goers safe and together throughout the early morning hours. The event is held at the school from midnight to 6 a.m. with a buffet breakfast culminating the festivities. This event is made possible by generous donations which have already started rolling in to post prom headquarters, as local businesses have responded to donation requests. If individuals are willing to help, whether you have children in the school or not, please send donations to Post Prom All Night Party, 51 Forest Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Raffle items are also being solicited by the group as part of the events of the evening. If you are interested in participating in this capacity, call Anne-Marie Goff at 383-2684.

Spring baskets help the CHS music program

The Cohasset High School music department is holding a fund raiser to raise money for a trip in May. The fund raiser is called Spring Baskets.

The baskets contain blueberry muffins, chocolate chip and sugar cookies and assorted candy. The baskets come in two sizes: individual and family. The individual basket costs $13 and is for one person. The family basket costs $25 and for three to four people. Baskets can be delivered for $2 per basket or sent with a gift card for $3 per basket. Baskets will be delivered to Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate, but orders will be accepted from anywhere as long as they will be picked up. If you would like to order baskets, call 383-9044 and ask for Liz or Julie.

You can also pick up order forms in the Cohasset High School, Deer Hill School and Osgood School main offices. Orders will be accepted through Thursday, March 25. Pick up and delivery will be on Saturday, March 27 from 2-4:30 p.m.

ASP yard sale 'pre-sale:'

As a pre-yard-sale event, the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold a silent "Auction-by-Fax." The prize: a "Luxury Suite" (donated by National Abatement Services, Inc.) at the Fleet Center for the April 14, 7 p.m. match-up of the Boston Celtics and the Atlanta Hawks. The suite includes 12 seats, parking, soda and pizza. Bids will be taken and acknowledged by fax at 383-7005. For updates on the bidding, call 383-0345. The closing for bids will be midnight, Wednesday, March 31. The winner will be called before noon Thursday, April 1.

Stock sales: The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project, planning for its 12th trip from Cohasset, will take as many as 140 volunteers to West Virginia this year. With 97 teenagers and accompanying adult volunteers leaving bright and early Saturday, June 26, they will be involved in a week's long project to make homes in the hills of Appalachia dryer, warmer and safer. The fundraiser for March (in addition to the Silent Auction) is their annual sale of stock in ASP. Please be generous when asked or call 383-0345 to receive a contribution (stock request) form.

Yard sale: Then, coming in the second week of April will be its annual yard sale — Saturday, April 10 (Voting Day), 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. Please let us help you with your spring cleaning! Items may be donated the week just prior to the sale. For pick-up, please call 383-0345.

Annual Easter Egg Hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct the 23rd annual Easter Egg Hunt, for children 3 thru 11 years of age, on Saturday, March 20, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter Bunny and helpers will be on hand.

Children will be divided into 3 separate chronological groups: Group 1, ages 3+4(with parent), Group 2 ages 5-7, Group 3, ages 8-11

Please gather around your designated area sign before noon. Bring a small paper bag or container for your candy.

Individually wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape that will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold on to it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are: Cohasset Rotary Club, Veteran's of Foreign Wars-Post 9146, American Legion Post #118, the Cohasset Police Association, and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Rain date will be on Saturday, March 27, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

Visual history of Hull

The Cohasset Historical Society's spring dinner and lecture will be held at Kimball's by the sea April 25. The social hour will begin at 5:30 with dinner at 6 p.m.

The speaker is Richard Cleverly, president of the Hull Historical Society. His subject, "A Visual History of Hull from Civil War through the 1930s." Cleverly's rare slides will give you a glimpse of the grandeur of Nantasket at the turn of the century. See the amazing beach front hotels and elaborate entertainment facilities that filled Nantasket beach and drew crowds from far and wide as they arrived on a railroad designed especially to serve Hull. Those who have seen his presentation are impressed by the depth of his knowledge and his insights into Hull history.

Program and dinner $20 for members, $22 for non members. Choice of chicken or scrod. Reservations should be sent by April 17 to Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, 02025. Information only at the society, 383-1434, or John Hovorka, president of the society, 383-0766.

Is Your Back Getting In The Way Of Good Health?

Ideally, good health should be natural. Given a chance, the body can work seeming miracles. But if something interferes with normal body functions, natural health is harder to achieve. All too often, the back is the source of health problems. That sudden twist or fall you paid no attention to could have forced a vertebra out of position. And in the process, the nerves that spread out from between the vertebrae can no longer properly serve body organs. The result? Poor health. To make sure your back isn't getting in the way of good health, get a chiropractic checkup.

driveway.

Haddad said Monday he would tell Police Chief Brian Noonan that increased enforcement at the combined school driveway is "priority number one."

Haddad's pledge followed a heated discussion with selectmen during which school building committee chairman Rob Spofford was literally on the hot seat.

Selectmen were angry that the school committee wants to spend up to $50K to reconfigure the Deer Hill School driveway because of safety concerns there. They think the engineering firm that designed the driveway should have to fix it.

"Let's hold their feet to the fire, they screwed up," Selectman Tom Callahan said.

Plans are to separate the school buses and parents-in-cars by creating a new, temporary school bus access to Deer Hill through an existing school driveway at the edge of the school grounds on Sohier Street to the west of the combined driveway.

This way the school buses heading to Deer Hill would not share the access with parents rushing to the new Osgood School to get in line to drop off or pick up their children.

However, selectmen were very cool to the plan to create a blacktopped area so the Deer Hill School buses could exit from what is now the teachers' parking lot over to the existing combined driveway where the bottleneck now occurs. They were concerned about buses crossing in front of walkers and oncoming traffic - a plan that may create a new safety problem. But without that new curb cut into the combined driveway, buses would have to loop back around and exit out the proposed west access, which has poor sight lines.

Selectmen grilled Spofford about what in their view is throwing money at the problem.

"There are other things we can do with $50K," Callahan said. "This is absurd because someone won't hand out a few tickets."

Two weeks ago the school committee said the problem should be fixed as soon as money is available due to the safety issues involved.

Town meeting will be asked to appropriate $50K for the reconfiguration as part of a $244K article that also includes money to finish air conditioning the new Osgood and to resolve some drainage problems there.

Spofford said $114,075 is needed for a permanent solution to the traffic flow problem but recommended those plans wait until the Deer Hill School renovation project gets underway. October's fall town meeting will be asked to approve capital projects at the Deer Hill and Middle-High Schools. Those projects may qualify for 60 percent reimbursement from the state.

Spofford told selectmen that the stopgap driveway plan is not written in stone.

"In our opinion, there has to be a diversion of some sort," he said. "The issue is we need the money but before we spend the money we will come back and explain (how it will be used)."

He said the money could go toward the $114K permanent fix if the temporary solution isn't feasible.

"We will come back to you with our recommendation," Spofford said.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie M. Morris said the board wanted to be assured there was no better option.

Callahan said the bottom line is that people are passing buses with their lights on.

"We should not indulge people in a rush to get to tennis lessons," he said.

Sgt. Jackson said heavy monitoring of the situation would continue into the foreseeable future despite any potential complaints from parents who are issued tickets.

"They didn't hire us to be popular," he said. "We're here to enforce the law."

making which he discovered recently. "We get a $156,000 assessment fee from the MBTA and we have no idea why," he said. "It's been that way forever. If we had the train going through here I could understand it. We also pay into a Retired Teachers' Pension, but we have our own. We haven't heard from the Department of Revenue on that yet. Those two assessments alone could help—that's half the override."

Haddad said that there is a general three-year cycle of overrides in the town, and that the town was due for one last year but was saved by town growth from Sunrise Assisted Living and the Rose Hill subdivision.

Malvey explained that the school department had agreed on a 9 percent increase after coming down $75,000 at the selectmen's request.

"The school committee had to make some serious and honest decisions about having the schools stay status quo versus making improvements," he said. "We're a people-oriented, labor-intensive business so salaries will take up to 60 to 80 percent of any school budget and that doesn't leave too much more for the budget."

Haddad explained three articles on the warrant for town meeting March 27 for the audience.

"We're requesting a transfer of $150,000 of the school's $350,000 in technology money to cover unforeseen expenses, but $200,000 will still take technology a long way," he said.

A $244,500 request made jointly by the school committee and school building committee will complete the air conditioning infrastructure at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School. $190,000 of the money would go toward the air conditioning and $50,000 would provide additional work at the Deer Hill driveway where, Haddad pointed out, some of the audience had parked their cars in the school bus lane visible from the cafeteria windows.

Stephanie Noble, who is running unchallenged for the school committee seat left vacant by chairman Rick Shea, wanted to know why money allotted at town meeting for technology was going back to the school budget for other purposes.

State officially approves sidewalk money

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts Highway Department has officially approved a $166,000 grant for a new sidewalk in the village by setting aside the money in a special account. Mass Highway contacted the town on Feb. 16 announcing the latest step in the grant awarding process. The town actually applied for $165,900. The project began last year when the town provided $10,000 for preliminary designs and grant applications. The task force put the project together, applied for funding, and received the Mass Highway grant late last year.

"This latest letter tells us that the money for the project is secured now," said Dean Rizzo, chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force. "It is now up to us to put the project out to bid, then get a contractor to do the construction work."

Mass Highway oversees all aspects of the project. The town is required to submit all bids, schedules, plans, drawings and time-lines to the state for approval. The funding is reimbursed to the town once the project is finished.

Town officials see the sidewalk project as one of the many components that could help revitalize the business community in Cohasset Village. The $166,000 grant would be used to reconstruct the sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's from Robert E. Jason Road and South Main Street at the bus stop to the corner of Elm Street and South main at the antique store.

The task force presented preliminary designs for the sidewalk at public forums held last year. Ideas and suggestions from residents and business owners were incorporated into the design. Rizzo said the design specifications for the project are 90 percent complete.

The task force still has to resolve two issues to complete the preliminary design phase. Rizzo said the task force must still choose a width for the new walkway. If the town chooses an eight-foot sidewalk, then workers will have to blast out ledge near St. Stephen's. One alternative is to reduce the sidewalk width to five feet. The other design issue concerns the intersection at Elm and South Main Streets. One option favored by the task force would place a bump-out in the sidewalk at the intersection to accommodate a bench or landscaping. Rizzo said the task force is leaning toward a design that addresses safety concerns expressed by town officials.

Once the designs are finalized and approved by selectmen, the task force can issue a request for proposals seeking contractors to do the work. Rizzo said he hopes the town can get the bids out by late spring or early summer so work can begin in September or October. Rizzo said the task force hopes to complete the sidewalk by late November to avoid disrupting businesses during the Christmas season.

"The $150,000 was from a transfer of free cash," said Haddad. "We're bringing that back to take care of a short fall, mostly due to SPED."

Malvey explained that school budgets are planned each year before town meeting based on current numbers, so that if a high number of SPED students sign up over the summer, the school has to reconfigure its budget needs to incorporate the higher SPED population. "You're budgeting for known costs as of March 16, but with new families and newly identified students, we can be put in a deficit even before we start the new year," explained Malvey. "We shave off what we can from our operating budget, from the $350,000 for technology, and we still have to go shaking our cup to Mark."

Malvey added that while SPED is a driving force in the school budget, the children are entitled to an education.

"The issue is not going to go away," agreed Elaine Breslow, 90 Old Pasture Road. "It could be your child, niece or grandchild. Maybe we should make this point clear so that people understand why the money voted in for other expenses, like technology, have to go back to the schools. Massachusetts is one of the lowest funded states, I think about 17 percent (for SPED), and the only way we can change that is through legislation as was suggested at the PAC forum. We need to learn about lobbying as a community—it's the only way."

Haddad went over the air conditioning situation, which began with a quote thrown out at town meeting by an architect who estimated $150,000 to complete the air conditioning. "It turns out that when we placed the actual bid, it was much higher," he said. "But if you don't spend the $190,000 to put air conditioning in, you've basically thrown away the $250,000 spent to make the system air conditioner-ready."

Malvey said that he has done contingency plans in other towns to protect against deficits.

"It's so tight, we don't have put contingency money in the budget," explained Haddad. "We don't have the capability to build an actual amount just now because the taxpayers can't afford it so we stay underfunded and hope for a surplus."

Malvey said that he is also talking with other schools about arranging cooperative cost savings programs.

Haddad said that the town is also looking into shared purchasing with other towns to save cost.

Jane Pescatore, 12 Lantern Lane, asked if there would be another general override.

"We will be at this every year or every other year and unless there is significant commercial growth, this will continue," said Haddad.

Raymond G. Buckley

A funeral Mass was celebrated March 10 at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset for Raymond G. Buckley. Mr. Buckley, 74, of Cohasset and Eastham and formerly of Canton, died at home March 6 following a long illness.

Mr. Buckley was president of the Buckley Corporation, which manufactured industrial shelving and pallets for warehouses, for more than 40 years. He retired in 1986.

He was a corporator for the Weymouth Savings Bank and developed the Bay Colony Estates in Eastham after his retirement.

He served in the U.S. Army during WW II, was awarded the Bronze Star Medal for meritorious service in the European Theater of Battle and was a prisoner of war in Germany. He was state commander of the Massachusetts Department of the American Ex-Prisoners of War (Ex-POWs) and commander of the Southeastern Massachusetts Chapter of Ex-POWs. He was a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, Veterans of the Battle of the Bulge, Disabled American Veterans and the 84th Infantry Railsplitters.

He served his community as a member of the board of directors of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corp. and worked on the restoration of the Lightkeepers House on Government Island. He was one of the founders of the Cerebral Palsy Center in Quincy and was instrumental in the acquisition and operation of the Cohasset Senior Citizen Bus.

Mr. Buckley was active in St. Anthony's Parish in Cohasset. He contributed to the Holy Name Society and Parish Council and held the positions of lector coordinator, and altar server. He was also a member of the Old Goats Club.

He leaves his wife of 50 years, Patricia M. (Chase) Buckley; three sons, Gerard A. Buckley of Cohasset, Brian D. Buckley of Eliot, Maine and John R. Buckley of New Britain, Conn.; a daughter, Michele A. Mills of Hanson; five brothers, Joseph D. Buckley, Albert P. Buckley, George E. Buckley, Paul R. Buckley and John M. Buckley, all of Cohasset; a sister, Marie E. Lucas of Scituate; seven grandchildren; and more than 50 nephews and nieces.

Interment was in St. Paul's Cemetery, Hingham.

The McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, directed the arrangements.

In lieu of flowers contributions in Mr. Buckley's memory are preferred to St. Anthony's Parish Building Fund, 129 S. Main St., Cohasset 02025; or to Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Baystate Drive, Braintree 02185.

Louise Rose

Louise E. (Luippold) Rose, 100, of Ruskin, Fla., formerly of Cohasset, a homemaker, died March 7 in Florida.

Mrs. Rose was a member of the Rebecca Lodge in Boston and a charter member of the Christ Lutheran Church in Scituate.

Born and educated in Boston, she had lived in Cohasset for 50 years before moving to Ruskin four years ago.

Wife of the late Carl A. Rose, she leaves a daughter, Irene Knell of Ruskin, Fla., and eight grandchildren, 20 great-grandchildren and a great-great-grandson. She was also the mother of the late Charles W. Rose.

A funeral Mass was held at the McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home, in Cohasset. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the American Cancer Society, 1115 West Chestnut St., Suite 301, Brockton 02301 or to the Christ Lutheran Church, Rte. 3A, Scituate 02066.

Mrs. Dora E. (Peterson) Stranberg

Mrs. Dora E. (Peterson) Stranberg, 83, of Cohasset, died Friday, March 5 at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home.

Mrs. Stranberg worked for the former Norfolk County Hospital in Braintree, now the Massachusetts Respiratory Hospital.

She was a member of the Congregational Church of East Weymouth.

Born in Waterbury, Conn., she lived in Rockland, Weymouth and Quincy before moving to Cohasset.

Wife of the late Henry Stranberg, she leaves a sister, Flora Daw of Weymouth and three nieces and nephews.

A funeral service was held at the Mortimer N. Peck Funeral Home, E. Weymouth with the Rev. Gary Blume of the First Church in Weymouth officiating. Interment was in Fairmount Cemetery, E. Weymouth.

Donations may be made to the Jimmy Fund, c/o The Dana Farber Cancer Institute, Attn: Gift Processing, 44 Binney St., Boston 02115.

Constance S. Jones

Constance (Stoughton) Jones, 73, of Cohasset, a town of Cohasset employee, died Sunday, March 7, at South Shore Hospital after a long illness.

Mrs. Jones worked in several capacities for the town, the last being assistant town clerk.

She enjoyed camping, cooking, traveling, gardening, reading, quilting and needlework.

She was a lifelong resident of Cohasset.

Mrs. Jones leaves her husband of 56 years, Ashley F. Jones; a son, Thomas Jones of Cohasset; four daughters, Judith O'Donovan of Carver, Janice Sargent, Geraldine Ainslie and Marion Douglas, all of Cohasset; a sister, Welthea Maxwell of Norwell; 11 grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; and several nieces and nephews.

A memorial service was held at Beechwood Congregational Church, Cohasset. Interment was private.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Remembrances in Mrs. Jones' memory may be made to Beechwood Congregational Church Living Memorial Trust, 51 Church St., Cohasset 02025 or the American Lung Association, 1505 Commonwealth Ave., Brighton 02135.

Bake sales raise some 'green' for Deer Hill courtyard

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Last month's Valentine's-Day treats baked by nine fifth-grade Deer Hill School girls sold out quickly. But cupcake aficionados needn't despair-the "Courtyard Cookers" were back last week with more goodies to go toward revitalizing the school's courtyard.

The money earned from the bake sales go toward purchasing plants for the school's courtyard, which is the common cause that unites the young bakers. Over the next few months, the girls will meet up twice a month to spend three hours of kitchen time to produce similar results.

"In this age of school budget crunches, it is refreshing to find individuals and particularly children who are devoted to giving back to the community," said Catherine Davis, mother of one of the Courtyard Cookers, Molly Trisler.

"The students love it," she said. "They buy the goodies that are set up near the gym indoors and then have permission from Principal Paul Callahan to take it outside to eat."

The idea to raise funds for the courtyard through the baking project was the brainstorm of Helen Daley, a mother of two Deer Hill students, Girl Scout leader and Ohio transplant; and Judy Moore, who was teaching her daughter and a group of friends how to cook.

"Catherine Davis and I were leading a cooking group last year, just to offer the girls something to do during the winter because a lot of them don't participate in sports," said Moore. The culmination of the group's efforts was a mother-daughter dinner that Daley attended.

"Helen was talking about the courtyard and I jokingly said that we'd bake something for the project if she wanted, and she did!" said Moore. "It's turned out to be a lot of fun and I think the girls are really enjoying it."

Daley hs been advocating for the courtyard since she first set eyes on it.

"When I first saw the courtyard, I thought, 'Oh, this place has such potential but needs some love and care,'" she said. She shared her ideas with others and Moore is only one of her latest recruits to be drawn in by Daley's enthusiasm.

Last year, she gained the expertise of landscaper Bob Mowbray, whose 20 years in gardening has led to an appearance on Chronicle, a stint as co-host of the cable station HGTV gardening show and his current work at Village Gardens in Norwell.

Mowbray volunteered to discuss plans for the courtyard with the fourth-, fifth- and sixth-graders of Girl Scout Troop 4770 that Daley had involved in the project. He drew up a design best suited to the active traffic of the courtyard, as well as the girls' sense of aesthetics, with the assistance of his landscaping colleague, Jean Connors, also of Village Gardens.

Boy Scout Troop 28, under the leadership of Phil Lehr, planted pine trees for the girls and

The Town of Cohasset, Massachusetts hereby requests competitive sealed proposals for the sale of a fee interest in certain real estate, and the improvements constructed thereon, the address of which is 24 South Main Street, Cohasset, MA and which is known as the "Independence Building". The Property will be sold "as is". There is no minimum bid price. THE SALE OF THE PROPERTY IS SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF COHASSET TOWN MEETING. The Form of Bid, which includes detailed specifications, are available at the Town Manager's Office, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, Massachusetts 02025 during normal business hours. A deposit in the amount of five (5%) percent of the proposed purchase price in the form of a check or money order made payable to the "Town of Cohasset" must be included with the bid.

The proposal items shall be enclosed in a sealed envelope bearing the following words: "PROPOSAL: 24 South Main Street, Cohasset Property" and forwarded to, Cohasset Town Manager, Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025. Bids will be accepted until 10:00 A.M., on Thursday, April 15, 1999, at which time the proposals will be open and read aloud. The Town reserves the right, but is not obligated,to waive informalities. The Town further reserves the right to reject any and all proposals as it deems to be in its best interest.

built six picnic tables for the area for students to enjoy in fair weather.

Flowers, vegetables, herbs, bulbs to bloom in the spring-a colorful bounty to attract butterflies and birds to the courtyard-has been steadily worked on since the Oct. 26, "Make a Difference Day." Weeding, as well as planting bulbs and shrubs, has been completed by the Girl Scouts.

The Courtyard Cookers' sales will help to bring the design to fruition with some democratic input from fellow students.

"I think that one thing that's really important and probably the one thing that really would have gotten me to do this no matter what is that this particular project we're doing offers an opportunity for every person-students and teachers at Deer Hill-to be involved in improving a part of their school without being a burden to the taxpayers," said Moore. "After the last bake sale, once we've tallied up our earnings, we'll sit down with Helen and have about a half-dozen options that the whole student body will vote on."

Moore pointed out that many students aren't in clubs like Girl Scouts or Boy Scouts and this allows them to participate.

"It's such a great courtyard and they'll all enjoy it once it's done," she said. "Butterfly gardens, ways to attract different birds with plantings, and maybe even some way to tie that in with science are some of the things we've discussed for the courtyard. But the more we think about it, the more the possibilities expand."

The Courtyard Cookers members are Kelsey Bell, Mamme Daley, Katie Moore, Caitlin O'Connell, Emily Savage, Devin Smith, Molly Trisler, Emma Weston and Jessica Wheelwright.

Forum prompts rewording of septic system plan

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

About a dozen town residents showed for a public information meeting last week on the health board's proposed management plan for septic systems.

Health board member Stephen Bobo explained that after the current proposed sewer projects are completed, there will still be about 1,500 of the households on septic systems.

What the board is proposing, and what voters will decide on at the March 27 town meeting, is whether or not the town should borrow $200,000 from the state to implement 20-year, interest-free loans for residents in non-sewerable areas that need septic system repairs or upgrades. The "voluntary" program would mean that residents would pay back the loan over 20 years through betterments and then continue paying a maintenance fee on the systems to the town that match sewer service costs.

Two years ago, the health board's plan was a mandatory one that required bureaucratic management to maintain it. That plan did not make it to a town meeting vote.

The new plan was revised by Bobo, who said that the town needs to have a wastewater management plan in order to get the $200,000 from the state at a low rate.

SEA, Inc., wrote the last plan in 1996.

"They were hired under a town contract to write it," explained Bobo this week. "I used much of the verbiage that they had in the original plan, but revised it to a voluntary one."

Questions about the voluntary nature of the health board's proposed septic plan prompted Bobo to reword those sections that raised the most confusion in last week's meeting on the issue.

Charles Sturdy, who is running for health board and was present at last week's meeting, questioned how voluntary the plan could be for people with failed systems.

"The intent is that the plan is voluntary," said Bobo. "If you want to access money for a loan on your own, you can. You don't need to sign up for the waste water management system. That's how we'll reword it to be clearer."

Resident Edward Goff thought that the entire town should pay for the system so that it would lessen the load on individuals in affected areas.

"There may be people not in a position to pay back loans," he said. "Everyone is paying into Straits Pond, the new school and the new sewer hook up. If the town takes over everyone's system, then everyone has to pay for this just like they have to pay for the sewer."

Health board chairman Kevin Ulmer explained that that was the board's intent two years ago.

"We took the advice of some of the people at the meeting and changed a number of provisions," explained Bobo in a phone interview this week.

"We made it much clearer that the plan is voluntary and that anyone wanting state funding can apply for it whether they've applied for the maintenance plan for the provision or not," he said. "If they sign up for the maintenance aspect of the plan, the town will pay for all maintenance and upgrading of the system unless the homeowner decides to increase the size of his house, in which case he would have to pay for the increased requirement on his septic system."

Ulmer said there would be a cap of $20,000 per system which would be used for 10 systems. "The flexibility will be there," he said. "The intent is not to build a bureaucracy."

Bobo explained that the town will first apply for a loan of $200,000, keeping within the loan cap recommended by the town's capital budget committee. The first 10 homes that join the p[rogram] will receive $20,000 each, interest-free.

"We're applying for a $600,000 loan this summer," he said. "If the town approves that, then we have a lot more money to give out interest-free. This summer, we expect to know more about it to expand appropriately. We expect that the town will allow us to borrow more, but we don't know when."

Copies of the amended plan are available at town hall in the health board office, and the town clerk's office from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Wednesday; 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m., Thursdays and 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Fridays. Copies can also be found in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

The next health board meeting informational meeting will be held at 7 tonight in the town hall auditorium.

Single session town meeting hoped for Budget deficit could be hot item

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Saturday's town meeting could buck a trend.

With just 24 articles remaining on the warrant, it's possible town meeting business could be wrapped up in a single session.

"We'll have six hours of productive time," said Town Moderator George Marlette about the annual town meeting that gets underway at 10 a.m. at the middle-high school gymnasium. Most Cohasset town meetings have 40 or more warrant articles and can spill over into two, and sometimes three sessions.

Marlette said he'd get the meeting underway as soon after 10 a.m. as the quorum of 100 registered voters is reached. The meeting will take a 45 minute break at about 1 p.m. for lunch. Local boy scouts will be on hand selling refreshments.

But despite the small warrant, voters will likely debate several controversial matters, not the least of which is the $21M total budget, which is out of balance by some $766K.

Opening up the budget on town meeting floor is something town officials don't relish. Town Manager Mark Haddad has spent countless hours in meetings and negotiations to try and keep the numbers in red as

Challenge to town manager act is dropped

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The town manager will retain the authority to award all contracts in town, including those issued by the water commission. That's the situation now that a citizens' article giving contract awarding authority back to the water commission has been withdrawn. At the request of Town Manager Mark Haddad, the 10 citizens who filed the article have agreed to withdraw it from town meeting consideration. John K. McNabb Jr., the lead signer on the petition, said the article was withdrawn because some town officials viewed it as an attack on the integrity of the town manager act.

"The bottom-line is that we agree that it is important to have a paid professional like the town manager serve as a watchdog over the contract process."

— John McNabb,
water commissioner

"Increasingly, members of the board of selectmen and the advisory committee said it looked like we were attacking the town manager act and picking a fight with Haddad," McNabb said. "It was creating a lot of confusion. We felt justified in withdrawing the article based on these legitimate concerns."

McNabb said the water commission article also lost some of its impact the sewer commission lost a lawsuit against the

School to start early next year

By Constance Pittman Lindner

Cohasset kids will enjoy a few less days of summer vacation this year.

That's because the school committee agreed on a pre-Labor Day opening for the 1999-2000 school year, despite the decades-long tradition of students returning to classes after the holiday. Next year, Cohasset schools will open Sept. 2, four days before Labor day, which is Sept. 6.

As it stands now, Deer Hill and Middle-High School teachers will preside over classrooms until June 23 and the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School, which got off to a late start this year, will end June 28 .Teachers who will preside over the four "snow" days tacked onto school this year provided input for the change, the school committee said.

"Apparently, it's easier to get the children to pay attention when they're first back to school than at the very end of the year," said school committee chairman Rick Shea.

According to the '99-'00 calendar, the lengthier school holidays—Christmas break, winter vacation and spring vacation—will be held Dec. 24 through Jan. 2; Feb. 21 through Feb. 27; and April 17 through April 23, respectively.

Notification of flood control plans

Norma Kravette and Amanda Burgoon owners of The Carousel on Ripley Road wrote to Town Manager Mark Haddad asking for written notification of all meetings with Tutela Engineering regarding James Brook flood control plans.

"The flooding problems in this area have been extremely serious and have impacted us tremendously over the last few years," the women wrote. "Therefore it is of utmost importance to us to remain informed as to plans regarding repair and changes to this area."

Haddad replied that he forwarded their letter to Domenic Tutela and would keep them informed of all meetings and decisions regarding this issue.

He added that the contract for Phase I of the project was awarded to Fiore Construction of Leominster and will provide flood mitigation and drainage improvements in Jacobs Meadow.

"We are currently in the process of developing the plans and specifications for Phase II, which would provide improved drainage in the village and Ripley Road areas," he said.

"Domenic Tutela will be present at a selectmen's meeting to discuss the final design with the board," Haddad said, adding he would inform Kravette and Burgoon of the meeting.

Summer uses of Osgood School

Selectmen voted unanimously to support the town meeting article that appropriates $190K to finish air conditioning at the new Osgood School but want the building used in the summer.

When added to the original amount of $250K appropriated for this purpose, the total to air condition the school is $440K.

"Even though, 60 percent of expense will be reimbursed by the state, this is still a major investment by the town," Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

At the direction of selectmen, Haddad wrote to the school committee requesting the committee consider future uses for the building during the summer months.

"This building is a major asset to the town and selectmen strongly believe it should be utilized year round," Haddad wrote in a March 17 memo to the school committee.

Dogs must be restrained at road race

Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy will hand out free dog leashes at Sunday's 6.2-mile road race thanks to the Cohasset Rotary Club, which sponsors the race.

In an effort to protect runners from unrestrained dogs, the rotary provided about 200 brightly colored, nylon leashes, Murphy said.

Leashes will be provided to any dog owner who brings his or her dog to the Common without one.

Murphy will also patrol the parade route before hand and pick up any dogs running loose. Every effort will be made to find he owner, he said. If necessary, the dog or dogs will be held in the animal control car until after the race is over.

"We're encouraging people to keep their animals in," Murphy said.

He explained there have been serious problems in the past with loose dogs at the race. In one instance, a dog darted across the race route just before the finish line as the runners were picking up speed.

"Unfortunately, a runner broke his ankle," Murphy said.

This year's Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, described by racing enthusiasts as one of the most scenic in New England, is expected to draw upwards of 800 runners. The race gets underway at 1 p.m. on the town common. A walk at 10 a.m. that drew 250 participants last year precedes it over the same route.

Katherine Stanton honored as Citizen of the Year

Special reception at Kimball's by the Sea

Gerard Stanton pays a tribute to his mother at a special reception in her honor Sunday which was attended by about 85 invited guests at Kimball's by the Sea.

Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year, Katherine Stanton, center, is surrounded by the Rev. Gary Ritts (1996 Citizen of the Year) and Anna Abbruzzese (1997 Citizen of the Year).

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray talks about Katherine Stanton's many volunteer efforts.

Katherine Stanton gets a congratulatory hug from her brother, Frank Magullion.

If town meeting okays the budget, voters will be asked to support raising the tax levy by $766K at the ballot box April 10.

Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said budget figures aren't usually what draws a crowd.

"We're not changing the leash law and we're not allowing outsiders to park at our beach," he said. "So whether we spend an extra $1M a year gets people out, that's yet to be seen."

Avery said the purpose of Prop. 2-1/2 — the state law enacted nearly 20 years ago that caps how much a town can raise its tax levy in a given year — was to get towns to refocus on how they run.

"Towns were supposed to regionalize, out-source and question everything," he said. "But none of that's really happened.

"We have a community 9-1-1, we don't share between school departments and or share resources, like water."

Avery said an override is almost automatic unless the town is going to change dramatically.

The school department has two articles, which are likely to spark interest. One requests $250K to set the stage for renovate the Deer Hill and middle-high schools, projects which will require debt exclusion votes in the fall.

The second asks for a total of $244K to complete the air conditioning project at the new Osgood School and for money to temporarily reconfigure the driveway that both the Deer Hill and Osgood schools now share. A new driveway system would be part of the Deer Hill project, school officials say. Both school articles require a 2/3 vote.

Local businessman Donald Staszko will ask town meeting to rezone a parcel of land that abuts Cohasset Plaza from residential to highway business. Look for the planning board to argue against the article, which requires a 2/3 vote. Selectmen and the advisory committee back the zoning change.

Perhaps the most profound article is the one asking for a change in the way Cohasset conducts town meeting business. Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, a local grassroots group, needs a simple majority to pass an article asking for a two-step system on many financial matters. If the article is approved, certain money articles approved at town meeting would also be subject to a ballot vote at the town election, similar to what happens with an override.

Officials seem to agree the issue needs to be studied first.

Avery said the article is a reaction to inconsistent attendance at town meeting during which special interest groups can get their item passed.

"The whole thing is in response to town meeting not be effective," he said.

Marlette, the moderator, said the issue needs careful study by the selectmen, government structure committee and advisory committee.

With new streamlined procedures in place, Haddad hopes that more people will attend town meeting making serious reform unnecessary.

"I'm a huge fan of town meeting and encourage everyone to come out," he said.

town trying to regain its contract awarding authority. McNabb said that lawsuit was a complete victory for the town that indicated that the town manager did have the authority to award sewer contracts. The judge ruled that the town manager act superseded the special act of the Legislature that gave contract awarding authority to the sewer commissioners for their projects.

The water commissioners believed it was important for them as an autonomous elected board to have the authority to award contracts for their projects. Town officials believed that the town manager act clearly gave all contract awarding authority to the town manager.

"The intent of the citizens' water commission article was to clarify the contract awarding authority between the water commissioner and the town manager," McNabb said. "The court decision against the sewer commission made it harder for us to present the water commission article as a clarification. It became more of a direct challenge to the town manager act."

McNabb said the water commission has been awarding contracts with Haddad since he became the town manager. Currently, the water commission draws up contracts or RFPs, and submits them to Haddad to check that the documents are legal and that the town has the money for the projects. Once the bids come back, both Haddad and the water commission inspect and sign the lowest bid.

"The water commission has never had a problem with Mark Haddad," McNabb said. "There haven't been any situations where he has exceeded his authority on contracts. The bottom-line is that we agree that it is important to have a paid professional like the town manager serve as a watchdog over the contract process."

Cohasset schools to start early next year

ter, school will let out June 14, 2000 without tacked on time for snow days. Even if there are, an earlier start would mean any snow days in June 2000 would occur earlier in the month.

Dr. John Ahearne, school superintendent for the town of Abington, can vouch for the scheduling tactic.

"We've been doing this for about six years and it's been very successful," he said. "We've had great, positive feedback on going back to school prior to Labor Day."

Ahearne said that the reason parents, teachers and students took so favorably to the calendar change is that they had suffered several years of late June classes due to snow days.

"Starting school early provides us with a cushion at the end of the year so that we don't have to have classes lasting until the end of June," he said. "Also, the quality of teaching time is greater in early September than late June."

Abington schools, which have had five snow days this year, will close on June 21 instead of the original June 14 closing date. Still, Ahearne says that compares very favorably with how other schools are doing due to snow days this year.

"Most communities are going to be ending classes in the last week of June due to snow days, and we've really prevented that from happening," he said. "We made this change after a couple of years when we did get out the last week of June, which was sort of an impetus for this."

An unexpected advantage for Abington school faculty is that the end of June professional opportunities week for staff occurs when many teachers' own children are still in school in other towns where a traditional calendar is followed.

Parents who have established the Labor Day weekend as back-to-school bargain hunting time might want to plan ahead.

Walgreen Drug Store in Cohasset expects to do fine on sales, given that the month of August has been a general back-to-school period for the stores, anyway.

"We really have sales all through the month of August," said Michael Polzin, a spokesman for the Walgreen chain.

"People tend not to wait until just before school to start to begin buying supplies these days," he said. "I think in general, the school year has been pushing a little further into August and as that's moved, people have started buying supplies earlier and earlier in the month, and that's when you see the sales starting."

Austin Lyne, owner of The Good Sport in Cohasset, has helped growing children choose the sneakers, cleats and other sporting accoutrements they need for 21 years.

"I imagine that an earlier start to school will increase business that last week in August," he said. "Whether it will have a dramatic effect on business overall, I'm not sure. I don't think that this pre-Labor Day return to school has happened before. We're so busy at that time of summer with summer goods still that we don't really need to rely on Labor Day sales. Call me back the second week in September and I'll let you know," Lyne said.

"We're very big on back-to-school sales for Labor Day," said one Old Navy worker in Hingham. "I know it's a big time of year for sales here."

Several school committee members were concerned that vacationers that have already booked flights for the late summer might find themselves unhappily surprised by the calendar change, but vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun correctly surmised that the earlier start wasn't likely to put too many people out.

"Families tend to set their vacations for not too late in the summer," said Kristin Curran, manager at Global Travel in Cohasset. "Usually they leave in early August so that their children will have some time to gear up for school."

Of croissants and croissanwiches

Webelos Jared Dick, Tristram Norman and Matt Tabor learned about local government at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, partly in search of a citizenship pin, and some of the finer things in life.

"What if McDonalds wanted to go where French Memories is?" Norman asked. "Would you let it in? Cohasset has always been sort of old-fashioned."

Other issues of interest included warm water at the Deer Hill water fountain—the boys were reassured by selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris that when they get to high school, they'll find fountains there that don't work at all—and a request for an update on the investigation into who spray-painted a local dog.

McMorris told the boys, "what I always tell my own kids is that selectmen have nothing to do with schools. If there's someone in school you don't like, we can't do anything about getting them fired and we can't get you extra vacation days.

"We take care of signs, dogs that bark too much or bite people, we support the various town committees and if you've heard your parents complain about taxes, it's the town manager here who decides how the tax money is spent," she said.

On a more serious note, town manager Mark Haddad explained to the boys that "we provide the services that you depend on so when you go to sleep at night, you know you'll be safe and when you wake up on a snow day, you know that thanks to us and the DPW, you'll have to go to school." Selectman Merle Brown steered the boys to the planning board for help with the McDonald's matter.

Lily Pond sewering will require an override

Rules and Regulations may not make it to town meeting

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

An override will be needed to accommodate the cost of the $1.2M Lily Pond sewer project after all, according to Town Counsel Paul DeRensis.

Voters will get to make a decision on the matter when article 15 goes before the March 27 town meeting and voters can approve or disapprove the article.

The Lily Pond project was added to the Central Cohasset project last October, in compliance with a court order. But the cost of sewering Lily Pond would be in addition to the original appropriation of $13.2M to install the 700 new connections of the Central Cohasset Sewer project. (Lily Pond will contribute an extra 24 connections.)

What that means is that if town meeting approves article 15, the taxes on the average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will be $11.31 a year the first year. The tax increase would go away once the 20-year bond issue is paid off.

Sewer commissioner Ted Guild and advisor Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, went before selectmen Tuesday night to discuss appropriating the funds for the Lily Pond project.

According to Coughlin, Lily Pond was added to the collection system by the board of health, selectmen and sewer commissioners, based upon concerns about the water supply.

"The sewer commission brought it to town meeting, it was approved and now all we're really trying to get the construction funds so that the Lily Pond area work can be sequenced with other projects so that they can all come on line simultaneously. We didn't have a preliminary design for the facilities prior to this, but we have one now and so we have a cost estimate that we can bring to town meeting to help expedite the project," Coughlin said.

Article 16 debated

Selectman Thomas Callahan took exception to an item within the sewer commission's Rules and Regulations which is in article 16 on the town meeting warrant.

Callahan was upset about wording in the item that would allow sewer commissioners to "manage contracts and make expenditures," which he said is in direct contradiction of a recent court decision that affirmed that power rests with the town manager.

"It's unconscionable that it's been slipped in," said Callahan.

Selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris said that the wording was in contradiction of the town manager's act.

"We had a dispute with them about this last spring," said Callahan yesterday in a telephone interview. "To me, it looked like they attempted to overturn a legal decision. Ted said that despite the way it looked, it was not his intent to challenge the legal finding. But I feel very strongly about this. I would speak against it at town meeting and I would even try to have it not presented at town meeting.

"Our town has just spent thousands of dollars on a legal issue related to the wording in there," he said. "It's a question of reversing a court decision we fought long and hard to win."

Callahan was not alone in his objections to article 16, which covers rules and regulations for the sewer commissioners.

Haddad said that town counsel had not had the opportunity to view the sewer commission's Rules and Regulations and had asked to postpone the discussion.

Guild said that the article contained a severability clause so that if anything in it is illegal, it can be severed.

"Overall, I'd be surprised if there are any concerns with the Rules and Regulations," he said.

McMorris said that she didn't think the public could get through the document's 46 pages left off at the town clerk's office in town hall and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for the public perusal, where only two of the three available copies could be borrowed overnight.

"It's 46 pages of very complicated information and there's no reason to not do this until the fall," she said.

Callahan also pointed out that wording about "reserving preferential treatment" in terms of new homes getting sewered could open the door for litigation for new developments that could say the sewer commission's decision was arbitrary and capricious.

Guild said that the public meeting March 24, held after the Mariner went to press, would help answer voters' questions and that the sewer commissioners would decide then whether or not to go forward with article 16.

COHASSET'S WEEK

School area lawbreakers are ticketed

Town manager Mark Haddad said that he'd received a "a lot of positive and negative feedback" in response to the police department's recent enforcement of speeding and other traffic violations in and around the new Joseph Osgood Elementary and Deer Hill schools. Police have been ticketing motorists caught speeding in the school zone on Sohier Street, as well as parents who pass school buses illegally while their blinking warning signals are on. Haddad said that the enforcement will continue for now and that he would keep the board informed on the issue.

Carillon to celebrate 75th anniversary

Selectmen approved an August celebration of St. Stephen's 75th anniversary of its carillon, The ringing of the carillon will be enough to wake, well, President Calvin Coolidge, who will make an appearance in honor of the event.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said that "Coolidge" will arrive as part of a reenactment of his visit to Cohasset to listen to the carillon. Selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris will introduce him to the assembled crowd.

Jason Road in the common will be closed off for the event.

AWARD WINNER

Cohasset resident William Hannon was recently awarded the Silver Lantern Award by the Boston Chapter of the Industrial Designers Society of America (IDSA). The award honors excellence in design education and has been awarded only once previously.

Hannon is professor of industrial design at the Massachusetts College of Art and principal of Hannon Design. Congratulations!

SOLAR COMPETITION

Jessica Jenkins, a Cohasset High grad and a senior mechanical engineering major at Northwestern University, makes the news this week. Jessica has been named a designated driver for Northwestern's entry in the annual Sunrayce. This solar competition is to take place in June, with entries from 60 Universities driving between Washington, D.C., to Orlando, Fla.

It takes two years to build vehicles for this race! Jessica is one of three in the aerospace group since its inception — she contributed to the design of the shell, the wheels and hub.

You can imagine the work and time involved in this project, to say nothing of the funds used to make the whole thing possible! Northwestern's coffers are pretty much depleted! If you would like to contribute to building a future solar vehicle, send your check to : Sunrayce at Northwestern University and mail to Professor Nate Newman, 2145 Sheridan Rd., Rm. M 250, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. 60208

John Harlow as Mr. Simpson, the minister, lights up the stage with Aimee Sears as his wife, Mrs. Simpson, in Thayer Academy's recent production of "Tommy." John is from Easton and Aimee is from Cohasset.

DEAN'S LIST AT UMASS

University of Massachusetts Amherst has announced that five Cohasset students qualified for the dean's list for the 1998 fall semester at its school. Here they are: Brian D. Duffy, Megan R. Fahey, Ryan S. McWilliams, Tracy L. Meagher and Eric J. Wenmark. Hats off to all of you!

KITCHEN TOUR IS APRIL 9

The South Shore Community Center announces its third annual kitchen tour which will be held Friday, April 9, from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. They anticipate this to be their best ever; five gorgeous kitchens on display, as well as many exciting caterers at each property. They will also offer free coffee and pastries at the Lightkeepers Residence where the tour begins and ends. The ticket prices are $20 until April 1. After April 1 the price will be $25 including the day of the tour. They have limited the event to just 500 tickets, and have had sell-out crowds every year. The tickets are available at the Community Center (snow date is Saturday, April 10).

DEAN COLLEGE NEWS

Congratulations to Justin J. McNamara who was named to the dean's list at Dean College for the fall 1998 semester.

NEW ARRIVAL

Ellen and Herb Winn sure are happy grandparents, and the reason for the joy? ... Gabrielle Nicole Brassard, who was born Feb. 23. She was born at 11:47 p.m. and weighed 7 lbs. 3 oz. Her little brother, John-Claude, couldn't be happier — and mom and dad, Brenda and Claude Brassard, are thrilled to pieces! Gabrielle's paternal grandparents are Ghyslaine and Guy Brassard of Cowansville, Quebec, Canada. Congratulations to all of you!

THAYER HONOR ROLL

Thayer Academy sends us word that Michael Ernst, Lindsay Feig and Carley Kalus all made the honor roll for the first semester. Great effort, keep it going!

VARSITY FIELD HOCKEY

Neely Wakeman, a senior at the Holderness School, has been named to that school's first quarter honor roll, posting an academic average of better than 85. This fall, Neely also served as house leader of her dormitory, and was co-captain of a varsity field hockey team that went 11-1-1 and claimed a New England prep school championship. She earned Lakes Region All-Star honors for her play on that team. Neely is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Wakeman of Cohasset.

HONORS AT HOLDERNESS

Alexander Gaston, son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Gaston III and a senior at the Holderness School, has been named to that school's first quarter high honor roll, posting an academic average of better than 90, and also to its second quarter honor roll. This fall, Gaston also served as the house leader of his dormitory and played a leading dramatic role in the production of several one-act plays.

SPRING IS HERE!

Finally this week, spring is here! Well, at least it is for Cohasset sports! Check the schedule out, then plan to attend as many events as you can — such fun to watch our superstars "do their thing."

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

DOCTOR JOHNSON

Entering Dr. Johnson's house was like stepping into a period piece movie taking place in the 1930s. It was only used as a summer house and had remained unchanged from the days when his wife's parents had inherited it. He was also a relic from a bygone era, but one of the most intelligent men I have ever had the privilege to meet. He had kept memorabilia from his journeys to Africa and the South Seas where he studied diseases for the government. When he died, I thought they should have put a sign on the front door "Museum" so people could have come in and browsed around. Very few houses look like that any more with its old coal stove and Baby Grand piano. He had a rifle over the mantle with arrows from Zimbabwe right along side, and a pelt from some animal he had to shoot because it had attacked his camp while he was in South Africa.

Whenever we worked there he would talk on any subject that was brought up. He always expressed his own opinions and would back them up with fact and reason. He also wrote volumes on the research he had done. I liked him, because in spite of his education, brilliance, and worldliness he respected the average plumber and listened to his opinions too.

ART NOTES

Artists from the Caribbean at Art Center

'Transformed Visions' by Gloria Rodriquez is one of many works in "Uncommon Perspectives: Artists from the Caribbean" on exhibit at the South Shore Art Center.

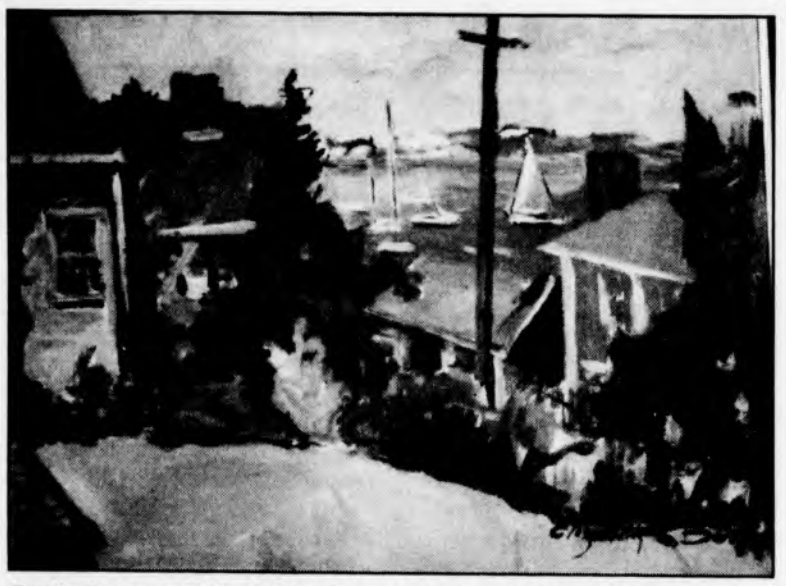
The exhibition, "Uncommon Perspectives: Artists from the Caribbean," features the work of 11 distinctive contemporary artists born in the Caribbean and now living in the United States. Opening Friday evening, March 26, from 6-8 p.m. In the Bancroft Gallery at the South Shore Art Center the exhibit brings together a diverse body of work linked by the artists' various relationships to the Caribbean.

In conjunction with "Uncommon Perspectives," the Art Center is linking several educational offerings with gallery events and artists participating in the exhibition.

On Friday, March 26, curator Nancy Cusack will present a preview orientation for classroom teachers and docents at 4 p.m., just before the opening reception. Much of the Art Center's outreach to schools through the programs "Arts to Go," and "Looking at Art" during the month of April will focus on contemporary Caribbean art.

Award winning Haitian artist and poet Marilene Phipps will offer an illustrated talk, "Voodoo and Its Altars, as Represented in My Work," at 2 p.m. March 27.

Sunday afternoon, March 28, is designated Caribbean Day at the Art Center, beginning with a concert at 2 p.m. by Gian Carlo Buscaglia and his trio Tolino. At 2:45 p.m., Cusack will host an informal gathering in the gallery with several of the artists discussing their work. At 3:30 p.m., Roberto "Luminito" Fernandez will introduce a video screening of the film "Fresay Chocolate" (Cuba, 1993). Admission price for the entire afternoon is $8 for members and $10 for non-members. For those who wish to drop by at 3:30 p.m. for the movie only, admission is $4 for members and $5 for non-members.



Don't miss an exhibit of Betty Burke's acrylic paintings at Brewed Awakenings.

Hingham artist at Brewed Awakenings

Betty Burke's acrylic paintings reflect her love of life and the world she lives in with vibrant still lifes and cheerful landscapes.

Don't miss her exhibit at Brewed Awakenings in Hingham Square next month. Her fresh color and bold loose strokes produce impressionistic-style paintings. The excitement and challenge of doing a new painting is like working out a puzzle and waiting for the pieces to fit into the scheme of things.

Burke was formerly director of the Scituate Arts Association Gallery in Scituate, and has been treasurer there for about 15 years.

Art restorer opens Cohasset studio

Craig Kay, fine art conservator, has recently settled in Cohasset. Kay specializes in the preservation and restoration oil paintings. His work also includes the restoration of large scale murals, oriental screens, antique fishing lures, carousel horse - in fact, anything with a painted surface.

Before moving to Cohasset, Kay lived on Nantucket Island, where his clientele ranged from the Nantucket Historical Society and Atheneum Library to many of the community's art dealers and collectors.

The name of his business in Cohasset is Professional Art Conservation at 781-383-9336.

NEVER TOO LATE

As our population ages, increasing numbers of older Americans are dismissing the notion that decreased muscle strength, stiff joints, and reduced bone mass are an inevitable part of the aging process. In fact, recent research points to the fact that various forms of weight-bearing activity can produce positive effects in each of these areas. And, when a healthy diet is added to the mix, it adds up to a general prescription for a longer and qualitatively better life. Of course, this is nothing new to chiropractors, who have steadfastly maintained all along that, given the proper nutrients and encouraged to function as nature intended, the body can do a remarkable job of keeping itself healthy.

During March, Nutrition Month, we would like to stress that nutrition plays an important role in your health. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we believe each person has the right to become as healthy as they choose. We will try to help you understand your choices about chiropractic health and let you make an informed choice regarding chiropractic health and chiropractic care. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Chiropractic works! Call us at 545-7388 and start feeling better. One of our agendas in raising a Healthy, Drug Free Family is to improve your familiy's natural immunity.

P.S. Studies show that even if you failed to engage in regular exercise later in life, it is never too late to start a healthy exercise regimen that will produce positive health effects.

Town meeting attendance

Chances are most of Cohasset's registered voters will sit this one out. They will abdicate to the few who will make all the decisions at Saturday's town meeting about how the town will spend tax dollars over the next fiscal year.

Ironically, it's the small town meetings that tend to be the fairest. At these a handful of diehard citizens air and debate the issues and reach an informed decision, one which we can all live with.

It's the emotional issues — as advisory board chairman Dick Avery points out like changing the leash law or beach parking — that draw the crowd, which often departs once the article is dispensed with.

We've written editorials for years encouraging you to attend town meeting not only because it's important but it's also a great civics lesson.

But we're not so sure that poorly attended town meetings are necessarily a bad thing. As long as the door is open and the opportunity is there, democracy can work. An important ingredient of democracy is that participation in it is voluntary.

There's a move afoot through a warrant article this year to turn town meeting into a two-step process. Town meeting would still be the forum for debate but ultimate approval of financial articles above a certain dollar amount would be sent to the ballot box. Proponents say ballot box approval is fairer because more people are likely to take a few minutes to vote at the polls rather than spend hours at town meeting.

It's an intriguing idea, one that is worth more study.

While we concede that town meeting at times can be "stacked" by proponents or opponents of a particular article — we're not sure a ballot vote, without the benefit of hearing the debate, would be an informed one.

We've seen many voters, who are dead set against a certain article, persuaded by town meeting debate to change their view and visa versa.

There are 24 articles — or items of business — before town meeting Saturday. Some, such as taking care of unpaid bills from this fiscal year, are usually routine housekeeping matters. But others, including the board of health's wastewater management plan, money for construction drawings to renovate the Deer Hill and middle-high schools, and a proposal to change the zoning to allow Cohasset Plaza to expand will likely be debated.

Take a moment before Saturday to read over the town warrant that was mailed to your household to see if anything piques your interest.

And if so, come on down! Town meeting may surprise you and not be as boring as you may think. In addition to government business, there are lots of familiar faces, including a few entertaining characters that like to espouse their views and stir the pot. And if you get hungry, there are refreshments for sale, thanks to local Boy Scouts.

Who knows, you might even enjoy it and become a town meeting groupie after all.

Let's not sell Cohasset short

TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset adopted a zoning bylaw in 1955, long after Scituate, Hingham, and other surrounding towns. The map adopted at the time contained many acres of light industry zone which is available for highway business along with the H.B. zones. With few substantial changes, it remains in effect. In recent years two efforts to extend the highway business zoning along the southwest side of Route 3A failed — the latter of these is now Kendall Village, just off Beechwood St.

The zoning map is the foundation of, and upon which rests, the entire zoning bylaw. Any changes to it should be made for the benefit of the whole town, not just the immediate neighborhood. The map is what all of us rely upon to protect the integrity of our investment in land and home, which for most people is their largest investment. If any changes are to be made it should be done as the result of an overall careful map study and not piecemeal.

Article 28 of this year's town meeting raises the question as to what benefit accrues to Cohasset as a whole by enlarging an already substantial highway business and light industry area. Does Cohasset need more and larger retail outlets? Do we see our town as a family community, a good place to live in, or as supporting a convenient place to shop in? Do we need to be another Hingham's Lincoln Plaza? Would we be a better town?

We are told that the contemplated enlargement will bring an additional $90,000 per year taxes. That amounts to about four-tenths of one percent of our next year's budget. It would reduce by $22 the average tax bill of $5100 on a home valued at $341,124 (town manager's figures), assuming that we already haven't figured a way to spend the $90,000. Let's not sell Cohasset short.

It's silly to say that traffic will not be affected. We've lived on the north part of King Street since 1946. This and Forest Avenue is the route to Hull. Traffic has picked up over the years, but with the opening of Stop & Shop and the other stores on 3A traffic has increased exponentially. More stores can't help bringing more traffic.

CCT clarifies position

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to thank the Mariner for the article in the March 18 edition discussing Town Warrant Article 22, the citizen's petition to place financial articles on a townwide ballot.

The article was well written but I would like to clear up one point regarding two current town meeting articles cited. During the interview I used as examples the articles referring to the new firefighting equipment and the school facilities request as merely the type of articles that would be placed on a townwide ballot.

The Concerned Taxpayers are not 'targeting' these articles for any purpose. I am highly in favor of the new firefighting technology even though that article is to be deferred until fall town meeting.

In regard to the $244,000 that the school building committee is requesting, as I told the reporter, I am personally against them using the money to finish air-conditioning the new school and to provide a Band-Aid fix for the driveway problem. This money is part of the original building project and is to be reimbursed by the state at the rate of 60 percent. I feel that it should be applied to something that will immediately provide a direct educational and/or safety benefit to the primary school children, such as technology or enclosing the new man-made ponds on the site. Our board of selectmen also have concerns about how this money will be spent.

The 'monumental' challenge of special ed.

Part VII: Thanks to the peacemakers

"ADVERSARIES REACH CONSENSUS ON SPECIAL EDUCATION REFORM"

The above quote came from a joint press release, dated March 17, 1997, of the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents (MASS) and the Advocacy Center (MAC)

THE WAY I SEE IT

that proved premature. The press release went on to say that, "After years of fierce disagreement, 15 diverse groups today offered unanimous support for a far-reaching package of special education reforms that will improve the current system, help contain special education costs, and provide necessary fiscal relief for communities." The 15 signatory organizations included the Massachusetts Association of School Committees (MASC), Federation of Teachers (MFT), Elementary School Principals (MESPA), Secondary School Administrators (MSSAA), Teachers Association (MTA) as well as MASS. It was agreed that there would be a "Study of the 'maximum feasible benefit' standard to determine potential harm and/or benefits of changing to the federal standard, to be completed within a year." The study has never been accomplished. Special education advocates overruled their own organizations fearing that the study would recommend adoption of the federal standard.

Because of total inaction, during February, 1999, the MASS issued a press release and its own study that said "...special education costs continue to rise at approximately twice the rate of regular education expenditures." It noted that 99 school districts (approximately 30 percent) saw 100 percent of all monies resulting from the Educational Reform Act of 1993 go to SPED programs. Cohasset exceeded Ed Reform funding by 127 percent. Nothing went to regular education programs. MASS noted "ominous trends," citing that the number of children in Early Intervention Programs had grown 86 percent from FY92-98. During the same period, the number of children with moderate to severe disabilities served by Early Intervention increased 156 percent. MASS recommended adoption of the federal standard and major changes to the evaluation process. Even the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) has sounded alarm bells because spiraling SPED expenditures are cutting into the ability of municipalities to fund other necessary services.

At the national level, March 9, 1999, the American Association of School Administrators (AASA) issued a stark warning that a recent Iowa State Supreme Court decision in "Cedar Rapids School District v. Garret F." will bankrupt public schools. AASA points out that the share of public school budgets devoted to "regular" education declined from 80 percent in 1967 to 58.6 percent in 1996. From 1991 to 1996, regular education accounted for only 23 percent of total spending for new school programs. In 1975, the federal government promised to fund 40 percent of the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Instead, the federal contribution stands closer to 10 percent. According to the Advisory Council on Intergovernmental Affairs, IDEA creates the fourth greatest amount of litigation of any U.S. statute and IDEA is "certain to rise to the No. 1 spot with the Cedar Rapids decision." In the February, 1999, American School Board Journal poll of superintendents and school committee members, nine out of 10 respondents said that special education paperwork and litigation are way out of hand — and so is the cost of special education.

SPED expenditures are actually increasing at approximately triple the rate of regular education because inclusion models do not adequately capture costs. SPED advocates maintain that the debate over "maximum feasible" versus "free and appropriate" is irrelevant, but their actions belie their protestations. Fairness is a two-way street. Some SPED advocates are using "maximum feasible" as a legal battering ram. In Massachusetts, we now have two classes of students. Twenty percent are legally entitled to be educated to the "maximum feasible" extent. Eighty percent of our state's students and 100 percent of the students in the 49 other states are educated to the lower standard of "free and appropriate." We cannot indefinitely afford to educate 20 percent of our Massachusetts students at costs that increase approximately 15 percent per year. Universal application of the "maximum feasible" standard will enrich lawyers while bankrupting taxpayers.

In a related local concern, the Cohasset School District technology training program and internet provider services should not be committed to the South Shore Collaborative without the normal due diligence of a Request for Proposal (RFP). The South Shore Collaborative, a 501c(3) non-profit organization, has a budget that is established by a Board of Directors that is not accountable to taxpayers. In effect, it has become a sole source out-of-district service provider. Also, rental of classroom space in Cohasset schools to the Collaborative should cover all direct and indirect costs.

The parent company of the Cohasset Mariner, Community Newspaper Company (CNC), is taking a pro-active role to break the current stalemate. Focus is shifting to defining disability criteria, equitable funding, weeding-out abuses, and discouraging spurious litigation. Personally, I believe the only solution is adoption of the federal standard to which major improvements were made as recently as November, 1998. As they have in the past, I am convinced that advocates will use delaying tactics to defeat meaningful reform. Let us hope that the peacemakers, to include CNC, can agree upon programmatic improvements that are fair to special needs and regular students as well as taxpayers. A truly monumental challenge.

This is the seventh in an eight-part series by former school committee member Joseph R. McElroy, who is speaking as a private citizen and not for the school committee.

FleetBoston merger fine, but not on employees

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Maybe you've heard the story. And it may be apocryphal as well. But here goes.

One of the Fords was showing Walter Reuther, the head of the United Auto Workers, around the family's newest auto-making plant when they came to an automated machine that had displaced some 25 or 30 union workers.

"Let's see you get dues out of that," said Ford with a chuckle.

"Let's see you sell it a car," replied Reuther.

I thought of that anecdote last week when I learned that, in an economy move, BankBoston and arch-rival Fleet Bank are joining forces to create a $178 billion bank, the eighth largest in the country.

That's Billion with a "B." It's roughly the equivalent of the gross national product of Turkey. If you started counting now, $1 at a time, your progeny would finish it sometime in the 21st Century — if Y2K doesn't wipe us out first, of course.

Then it was the South Shore National Bank, then the South Shore Bank, then the Bank of Boston, then just BankBoston and now FleetBoston. At least, they'll print new checks for me, unless my account is lost in the transfer.

The announcement of the merger contained the usual spin. It's good for the New England economy. It assures that the area does not become a subsidiary of one of the truly large banks, like BankAmerica with its $618 billion in assets.

Now, a merger like that doesn't happen in a vacuum. In order for Fleet Boston, as the new bank will be called, to add to its $178 billion nest egg, there will have to be cost savings.

And that means that some of the 427 BankBoston and 1,500 Fleet Bank branches will be closed and the main offices consolidated and you know what that means. As many as 5,000 of the two banks' 60,000 employees will lose their jobs.

Oh, there'll be severance pay, enough to keep you and the family going for a couple of months. There'll be something called attrition, which still means that you'll be fired, not now but later when the reporters and TV cameras have gone home.

There'll probably also be offers of retraining, like teaching a former branch manager or a vice president to ask, "Will that be fries with that burger, sir?"

Merging banks is a trendy thing right now. And the first action by the unified bank is to lay off enough employees to make the union worthwhile. Then they'll turn to doing what banks used to do — lend money and evict widows and orphans on Christmas eve.

I started my feeble savings account in the Weymouth Savings Bank. It's now the South Shore Savings Bank following merger with the South Weymouth Savings Bank, now the second largest bank in Weymouth after the Fleet Boston.

I also once had an account with the Granite Trust Company, which built that tall building in Quincy Square — and you're a young oldtimer if you remember that one.

Then it was the South Shore National Bank, then the South Shore Bank, then the Bank of Boston, then just BankBoston and now FleetBoston. At least, they'll print new checks for me, unless my account is lost in the transfer.

A more earthshaking question is: Will they have to change the name of that skating rink in Boston to the FleetBoston Center?

HEALTH NOTES

Changes in on-site wastewater plan

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

The Board of Health, as a result of suggestions by citizens at the two public meetings (Thursday March 11 & 18) held to discuss the plan, has made several changes to the wording of the plan which changed its intent.

Several of those attending indicated that elements of the plan did not appear to be fully voluntary. Specifically, the issue of periodic Title 5 inspections was addressed. Under the revised version of the plan, it is clear that anyone in town may receive low interest loans to repair their system based only on the availability of funds.

There will be no Title 5 inspections except at change of ownership of a property.

A Title 5 inspection is necessary only if it comes to the attention of the Board that a septic system is damaging the environment or represents a threat to public health, an existing Title 5 rule.

If a property owner elects to have his system maintained by the town for a fee, the system must pass Title 5; then the town will maintain and upgrade it based on a fee schedule to be set by the Board of Health.

If a homeowner, under the plan wishes to increase the capacity of his system (to accommodate an additional bedroom, for example) the cost of the added capacity would be the responsibility of the homeowner.

Other changes to the plan covered the upper loan limit for septic loans. The limit being changed from $40,000 to $20,000.

Also, if his septic system is under town maintenance, a homeowner is exempted from the requirement for a Title 5 inspection upon transfer of property.

Under the Septicredits provisions of the Plan, Septicredits are only available for perkable land which will be used for repair or upgrading of currently failed systems, not new construction.

Board of Health withdraws 100 Pond Street Article

After discussions with the DEP about the feasibility of getting approval for continued operation of the waste water treatment system at 100 Pond Street, it has been decided that there is not sufficient information about the operation of the plant to meet DEP requirements to issue a groundwater discharge permit necessary for continued operation. Accordingly, the Board of Health has decided to withdraw the warrant article calling for the town to take over the plant. This means that 100 Pond Street will likely be going on sewer, and their treatment plant will be dismantled and disposed of. The capacity of the plant is such that it could have accommodated wastewater from about 50 homes in the neighborhood including the 39 at 100 pond street.

Letters Sent to Abutters of Little Harbor

The Health Board is sending letters to about 200 property owners around Little Harbor describing the activity in this summer's water quality study.

High School Students Receive Global Positioning System (GPS) Instruction

As a part of Patricia McGrail's environmental science class, the EPA has provided instruction on GPS and its use to pinpoint geographical sites for water quality monitoring. On Monday 22 March, Tim Bridges of the EPA held training at the High School on use of GPS to locate geographical positions with one meter accuracy. The purpose of this training is to support the forthcoming Little Harbor water quality monitoring study being done for the Town to determine the sources of pollution to Little Harbor. The training included becoming familiar and working with GPS instrumentation. Later, the students went outside and practiced locating items on the high school property.

About 40 students will be participating this summer in the Volunteer Monitoring program coordinated by the Cohasset Lobster Lab, which supports the Little Harbor Study, under a grant from the State's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen:
Fire department overtime has been a problem for years. Is there a way of bringing the fire department overtime budget under control without compromising safety?

SELECTMAN/ Nan Roth

Controlling Fire Department overtime costs without sacrificing public safety has been a problem in Cohasset for the past decade. The Board of Selectmen, the Advisory Committee and the Government Structure Committee have studied Fire Department structure and costs in both Cohasset and the surrounding community. If there were an easy answer to this problem, it would have been implemented long ago.

Although minimum manning was eliminated from the most recent firefighters' contract, the Chief has determined that it is important to keep four firefighters on duty for public safety reasons and five are assigned to each shift. One is often absent because of vacation, illness, training etc. If the number per shift goes below four, additional firefighters are called in to cover and paid at the overtime rate. Each time the ambulance leaves Cohasset with two firefighters aboard to go to the hospital, two additional firefighters are called in and paid at the overtime rate. During the past year seven firefighters were out for extended periods due to injuries; their shifts were covered at the overtime rate.

What can be done? First, Cohasset could hire four more firefighters, one for each shift. However, the starting salary for a new paramedic (all new firefighters must also be paramedics) is $37,121 plus benefits, making the cost of hiring new staff excessive. A second option might be to increase the number and duties of call firefighters. Cohasset has had difficulty finding significant numbers of committed call firefighters, and this option would require significant union bargaining.. A third option is to eliminate all automatic call backs, and to operate the department with reduced numbers of firefighters on a shift. Our Fire Chief feels that this option would sacrifice public safety, although firefighters could be called rapidly in event of a fire or other emergency.

Each option has costs and benefits. A combination of incentives and small structural changes may be all we are able to do to reduce these costs. It may be that a certain amount of overtime is a necessary part of our Fire Department budget, and gives us flexibility to respond to changing circumstances.

SELECTMAN/ Fred Koed

This is an issue of balance between public safety and taxes. The real question is: have we optimized the total amount spent for personnel at the fire department?

The fire chief has decided for safety we need a minimum of four firefighters on duty. In the past, in order to have four people on duty, the town has had six people on a shift. This allowed for up to two people to be out on vacation or sick time before call backs.

A full time position with benefits is worth $50,000 per year. The town has reduced the shift size to five people for a savings of $200,000. The trade off was we were willing to risk some increase in the overtime budget, in the hope that it would be less than the $200,000 saved.

Call backs have been declining over the last three years. Mutual aid, an informal non-binding agreement between towns to cover each other, is also a consideration. For instance at West Corner, the Hull Fire Department would arrive before Cohasset to an alarm. Every town is expected to do it's fair share.

Insurance companies (ISO ratings) also analyze the level of fire protection and life support services provided in a community, including fire hydrant flows. Good ISO ratings lower homeowner's insurance costs for everyone. Maintaining adequate fire protection is off set by lower insurance costs.

While management should continue to monitor against abuse, if false alarms are driving overtime costs up, fees should be adjusted accordingly.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

While the most simple answer is "no," it is important to explain the current fire department situation. The primary reason for overtime is the fire department's size. According to Chief Lincoln, a number of years ago the town went to "bare bones" staffing and later cut four more firefighters. At the time, selectmen agreed that the short staffing would be made up with overtime. Purely in terms of dollars, it costs the town less in overtime than to rehire four firefighters

This past year was unusual in that the department experienced seven firefighters out on disability/sick leave at the same time. Also, a departmental vacancy could not be filled for an extended period due to a Civil Service Commission delay. Hopefully, such events will not recur

As a liaison to the department, I met with the Town Manager, Fire Chief and Merle Brown to explore ways to manage these costs. The Town Manager recently proposed that when the ambulance goes out of town, the department operates with two less firefighters, thereby leaving three, and possibly only two, on duty to answer calls. I am adamantly opposed to this proposal. The Chief has stated that such a policy would not only compromise the safety of the public in the event of a major fire, but would also jeopardize the firefighters sent on the call. These are unacceptable risks. Cutting costs should not be at the expense of the safety of citizens or staff.

Board of Health:
What are your views about expanding the capacity of the central processing (sewer) system?

HEALTH BOARD/ Robin Lawrence

It appears that the current expansion and upgrading of the Elm Street treatment plant is a fait accompli. Bids received for the project are within the budget approved by town meeting and the Sewer Commission is expected to vote on a recommendation of notice to proceed.

The salient issue is future expansion of the plant. Fastidious planning and judicial critical analyses are required to answer many technical, economic and societal questions prior to responsible decision-making: Engineering feasibility of further expansion? Cost to overburdened taxpayers of further expansion, voluntary vs. mandatory participation by property owners? Effect of further expansion on the fragile environment? Centralized vs. local decentralized wastewater management solutions?

It would be imprudent to take a position on the issue of future expansion of the central processing plant until a proposed plan has been exhaustively researched. At that point in time, I will thoughtfully recommend a course of action based upon an analysis of the facts as presented.

School committee:
Do you support spending $50K as a stopgap solution to traffic-flow safety problems at Deer Hill School?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Stephanie Noble

Spending $50K to address the traffic flow problems at the Deerhill School is an immediate and pragmatic response to the safety issues posed by the current traffic flow. I support this proposal in conjunction with Article 12 outlined in the warrant for the Annual Town Meeting.

There is no point in spending additional money at this time on a longer term traffic flow/parking plan until we decide the long term plans for the Deerhill school.

Calling this a 'stop gap' measure lends the proposal a negative connotation that the measure does not deserve. It is an expedient solution to a very real problem and it allows the town to plan the much needed renovation of the Deerhill school carefully and thoughtfully without this issue influencing longer term plans.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Betsy Connolly

I do support allocating $50,000 at Town Meeting through the warrant. This article will provide funding for an intermediate means of dealing with a difficult safety issue for the children at the Deerhill and Osgood Schools. By sharing the same driveway, Deerhill buses unload and load students at the same time that parents or staff members might be going through the Deerhill right of way to the Osgood School. Many people have raised questions regarding the dangers this situation could cause.

The Superintendent, Building Facility Committee members, Osgood School design engineers, school committee members, Osgood School design engineers, School Committee members, and Principals have been meeting with the necessary parties to address the safety concerns related to this unexpected problem. From my conversations with several of the people involved it sounds as if they are committed to arriving at a solution that all can agree upon and that will keep the children safe.

The Deerhill renovation proposal could include additional work on driveway accessibility and safety design. Quite possibly this might qualify for 60 percent State reimbursement. I have confidence that the professionals involved are doing everything they can to resolve the transportation danger expediently and I believe that they are looking in every feasible direction.

This article must pass so that the funds will be available for an intermediate solution to a potentially tragic situation.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Lowe joins McMorris Committee

Roger Lowe, trustee of the Paul Pratt Library, has joined the Committee to Re-elect Roseanne "Ronnie" McMorris. When asked why he was working for McMorris, Lowe said, "I want to see Ronnie re-elected because she gets things accomplished. She has demonstrated that she can bring people together to work in the Town's best interests."

McMorris, an attorney, is trained and certified in mediation.

Candidates Forum is March 31

Meet the candidates for the town of Cohasset local elections Wednesday, March 31, 7:30 to 9 p.m. in "Old" Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

Contested Races: Board of Selectmen Roseanne "Ronnie" McMorris, Nancy "Nan" Roth and Fredrick "Fred" Koed; Board of Health Robin Lawrence and Charles Sturdy.

Each candidate will give a brief opening statement and then entertain questions from a Chamber panel and those in the audience.

Candidates for the uncontested races will also be invited to attend. The forum will be televised live on local cable.

Ask the candidates the questions that are important to you and your business.

Do you have a question for the candidates? Fax to (617) 479-9274.

RSVP (781) 383-1010.

Coffee for Koed is March 28

Gerry Lipsett will host a coffee for Selectman candidate Fred Koed on Sunday, March 28, at 4 p.m., at his home at 34 Pond St.

All residents of Cohasset are invited to this coffee, where Koed will discuss his reasons for running for Selectmen and will be available to answer questions from attendees.

Please call Gerry Lipsett at 383-9770 to let them know if you are planning to attend, or if you would like to place a Koed sign on you lawn in the two weeks before the April 10 Town Election.

Reminder for all Cohasset citizens

Please mark your calendars and remember to attend and vote at Town Meeting Saturday, March 27. The General Override this spring addresses our schools and other town related services.

Babysitting will be available during Town Meeting. Those interested should call either Sarah Markert (6124) or Eileen Hart (0168) in order to preregister for this service.

Election supper is March 26

Come meet the candidates running for office at the Beechwood Congregational Church at 6:30 p.m., March 26. Call 383-1066 for reservations.

Absentee ballots are available

Absentee ballots for the annual town election on April 10 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, April 9, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office.

Next week's questions:

Board of Health:
How do you feel about smoking in the town's restaurants?

Selectmen and School Committee:
Keeping up with school building maintenance has been a challenge for the school department prompting some to say the town should take it over under an expanded department of public works. Would you support the town taking over the maintenance of school buildings along with that portion of the school budget?

Responses must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Answers, which must be limited to 250 words or less, may be faxed to 741-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street or the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square at 73 South St. Call 741-2933 with questions.

Primary colors to sprout soon around town

Election '99

All signs point to a colorful palette of campaign placards emerging from Cohasset lawns two weeks prior to the April 10 election, but blue and white will reign as the primary choice for this campaign.

That comes as no surprise to Deirdre Collins, manager of Richard Advertising in Dorchester, who has helped candidate novices and old-timers for eight years at the 45-year-old business.

"The most popular election signs are either blue and white or red, white and blue," she said. "Personally, I would recommend blue. You don't tend to see red as much, but you will see blue and to a lesser degree, green."

The standard election size placard is 22 in. x 28 in., explained Collins, who charges $210 for 100 one-color signs and $262 for 100 two-color signs.

"Sometimes town candidates will go with the town color, but that's usually blue or green anyway," she said.

Local candidates plan to respect the old Cohasset custom of posting election signs within the two weeks before town election. Some hadn't even planned on placing campaign boards at all.

"I am trying to keep this extremely low key," said health board hopeful Charles Sturdy. "But if Dr. Lawrence does them, then I probably will have to — vicious modern-day campaigns!"

Selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris has chosen to go with red again. "It seemed to work last time so I'm going to keep going with it," she said.

Selectman Nan Roth has opted for blue, but doesn't plan to put many up.

Sturdy thinks he'll also go with blue. "It's my favorite color," he said.

Selectman candidate Frederick Koed plans on using green for his signs.

Health board aspirant Dr. Robin Lawrence has opted for both green and blue. "I've chosen green for the environment and blue for the ocean that we live next to and cherish so much," he said.

"A lot of people are very subjective about color choices and they have their own personal favorites," said Guy Conrad, president of Farsight Marketing of Hingham. "Obviously, in any campaign you'll find red, white and blue. That's probably the more standard approach. Mary Jeanette Murray uses green all the time. Yellow will stand out, but no one would want to be thought of in connection with that.

"Blue and white signs would tend to denote your more normal-type candidate; red could be an extrovert who takes strong stands on things; and green might mean environmentally friendly, but here in Boston, it could just as well be a celebration of Irish ancestry," Conrad said.

No matter what color the candidates choose, this spring election promises to be nothing like last November's election, when an early crop of political signs led to a brouhaha over first amendment rights.

At that time, town policy prohibited the posting of political signs until two weeks before a primary or general election and signs had to be removed one week after. Also, residents had to pay $1 for each sign.

That is, until Joe Malone supporter Norm Paley of Scituate wanted a Cohasset backer to put up 25 signs in town.

"It sounded a little crazy to me that he had to get a permit to put the signs up," said Paley who discovered the campaign worker was only able to purchase permits for five signs because he only had $5 on him.

"'You mean, the town is charging money for the exercise of people's first amendment rights?' I asked him. And he said, 'Yes,'" Paley recalled.

More attention was drawn to the issue when selectman Nan Roth lamented the number of campaign signs rising up from front lawns at a Sept. 29 selectmen's meeting last year, six weeks prior to the election.

Town manager Mark Haddad checked to see if the town had a bylaw in place on the issue, but found there was none.

Building inspector Robert Egan, who looked into the matter, discovered that the town has bylaws on every type of sign except for political signs. He also found that state law does not allow fees for political signs, although it does allow towns to restrict posting dates.

Selectmen rejected a plan to draft a bylaw limiting the size and timing of political signs without charging a fee. That decision was largely based on town counsel Paul DeRensis' advice that selectmen not pursue a policy that would infringe on anyone's right to free speech.

"We weren't able to restrict signs, not that we were every trying to," said Egan. "I guess reasonable restrictions could be applied if they were in the zoning bylaw, but they aren't. So basically anybody can plant a sign."

Egan explained that money charged for posting political signs was used to keep track of applicants so that if their sign blocked traffic, say, on a rotary, the person could be contacted to go and move the sign.

"I don't think people in this town really go crazy with signs," said Egan. "It's the state candidates that seem to think that they need to plaster the town with them, but I don't think the candidates for local office act like that. Personally, I'm kind of glad to be out of the political sign business."

When election signs do spring up amid gardens this spring, Cohasseters will certainly check out the new bits of local color.

"Any color the candidates choose that makes them stand out is always positive," said Conrad. "And in the end, it's not the colors that will matter, but the candidates—what they say and how they act. That's always the ultimate deciding factor."

Offseason workouts vault Carter to top

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Carlie Carter was nearly 45 minutes into her workout at the South Shore Community Center and she was still trying to put together a solid vault landing.

The vault was nothing particularly difficult. Carter had pulled it off a number of times before. It was just…this one night.

The Cohasset High gymnastics season ended three weeks before for the 14-year-old freshman, but her competitive plate is still very much full with upcoming AAU meets. The biggest is the regional finals at the end of May in Methuen.

You would think by watching her practice that Carter was a day or two away from the biggest meet of her life. But that's the way the low-key blond approaches every workout, year-round at the community center. The AAU competition was a meet where Carter enjoyed one of her finest hours.

Competing in the novice division last year, Carter flew through her bar routine as though the apparatus was an extension of her lean body. She convinced the judges they were looking at the real deal as Carter took first place on what has always been her best event.

As a member of the club's "Gymnasts In Motion" squad, Carter is hoping to score somewhere in the neighborhood of 33 points in the All-Around in the Level 8 Sectionals later this month. The goal is a lofty one, she admits, but not out of reach.

"I've never scored a 33 before," Carter said during a break in practice. The '98-99 high school gymnastics season proved to be a breaking-out party for Carter.

Entering the season in the best shape of her life, the young honor-roll student was named to the Pilgrim Conference's all-star team on the uneven bars, having compiled an 8.025 season average.

Carter admits the all-star selection was a great thrill and one she hopes to duplicate in her three remaining seasons.

"I didn't do as well as I hoped to do in the All-League meet," she said, "but I worked all season to be an all-star."

But on this night, the vault is proving to be more of a roadblock than a springboard for Carter's aerial feats.

"I run down and my body won't let me go over," she said. "I've done that vault a thousand times."

It's Carter's athletic build that you first notice. It's the type of muscular frame that transcends over from gymnastics to most every sport; the type of physique female athletes would kill to have.

"I think you'll be seeing a lot of Carlie in the next three years," Ardizzoni said.

Over the summer, Carter will be working on new skills she'll use next season. She'll also concentrate on sharpening up her more familiar routines, as well as learning five-time All-Star Tara Hettstrom's graceful floor exercise.

With her overall body strength, it's little wonder that the bars have proven to be Carter's best event. "I've always been able to swing," she said with a laugh. It's the only event that has come naturally for me."

Of course dedication is one of Carter's unflinching characteristics as an athlete. And when you haven't missed a high school workout in three years and you have approached each practice with the same, unwavering determination, you tend to get the very best out of yourself. In that respect, Carter could easily serve as a gymnastics poster girl.

"I've been lucky," said Carter, whose younger sister Shelley had perfect attendance this season as a seventh-grader. "I just never get sick. Gymnastics, as you learn more, you only get better and better. I figure the more I go to practice the better I'll get. I'm very willing to keep going when I'm having trouble dong an event."

As good a season as Carter had this past winter, she'll be the last one to rattle off her meet highlights. Press, and you'll get the answers. Carter, in short, is not one to talk about herself. She's more comfortable talking about her teammates' highlights in the gym. "Carlie's the one who raves about every other gymnast on the team," Ardizzoni said. "She is very well-liked and always has time to help the other girls when they need it."

Next winter Carter and teammate Kristin Sheerin will be the go-to girls for the Cohasset squad. The partnership with Norwell this season was a surprising success as the team compiled a very respectable 5-5 record.

Annual MS Walk will make a million-dollar difference

Thousands of friends and neighbors will be walking to make a million-dollar difference in the fight against multiple sclerosis.

The Cohasset MS Walk begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 17 at Cohasset Town Hall. The 10K Cohasset MS Walk, sponsored by the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, is one of the 26 walks across Massachusetts and New Hampshire united by one goal — to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system with life-long physical and emotional effects.

MS Walk participants raise funds to support research, education, and advocacy that enhance the quality of life for 10,000 people with MS and their families throughout Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

To register for the MS walk, call 800-493-WALK or visit the web site at www.mswalks.org. The 1999 MS Walk is presented by USTrust with the support of WCVB-TV's HealthBeat Project.

For more information call 800-493-9255.

going to be big losses," Carlie said of her senior teammates. "There are going to be three sophomores. It's going to be very different." Carter, who also coaches the younger gymnasts in the center, believes the future of Cohasset gymnastics is bright and the team will thrive for many years to come. "A lot of them are really talented and they'll be really good when they get older," Carter said. A few minutes later, Carter headed back to the matted runway leading to the vault. She didn't plan on leaving until she nailed at least one good jump.

Carter, though, has put in plenty of conditioning work to maintain the figure that helped make her an all-star.

Then there's the schedule the three-sport athlete keeps during the school year. After soccer practice in the fall and lacrosse in spring, Carter practices for three hours each Monday and Thursday night, and another hour on Friday nights.

Carter wouldn't workout or compete if she didn't love the sport. Much of that has to do with Cohasset High and community center coach, Ruthann Ardizzoni. Ardizzoni has been the only coach Carter has ever had since she began gymnastics as a 4-year-old.

Carter credits Ardizzoni for her ability to maintain a relaxing balance of hard work and fun in the gym.

She also avoids putting a lot of pressure on the girls to perform well every time out. All Ardizzoni looks for is a good, solid effort.

"I like the self-rewards gymnastics give," Carter said. "I have fun doing it. Gymnastics, in general, is an individual sport, except in high school. I do feel more pressure in school because I don't want to let the team down. As for competing at the AAU level, Carter said: "I do it for myself and set my own goals. It really has nothing to do with anyone else."

Carter's training and conditioning program has made a definite difference. The muscles in her arms are rock hard, courtesy of a daily regiment of push-ups. During the summer she does step and weight work, along with 200 sit-ups. Carter's stomach is washboard flat and she has the toned, muscular legs of a distance runner. She is as strong, if not stronger, than anyone on the team.

"Carlie is very well-conditioned," said Ardizzoni. "She's a well-rounded athlete. No one works harder than that child and I'm glad things are paying off for her. Within the past two years she had made the jump. Being named to the all-star team has made Carlie work even harder."

Carter improved her scores on every event this winter, the most notable being the nearly three-point jump she made in the all-around competition. Carter's all-around rose from a 28 a year ago to scores in the 31's this season.

Carter's improvement hardly went unnoticed by those who watched her compete. Not only did her teammates notice her dramatic leap to all-star status, but others who had the opportunity to take in a meet or two were equally impressed.

Ardizzoni said she was approached by spectators, judges, gymnasts back from college and those from opposing teams. The comments were all the same; they were in awe at just how much Carter had improved in only a year.

It just went to show you how much all that hard work paid off.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Cohasset School Council nominees sought

The PSO nominating committee is seeking nominees for all three Cohasset public schools' school councils. The school councils are charged with formulating an annual school improvement plan and provide a great opportunity and forum to work with the principals and staff. Osgood will have two openings, Deer Hill has one and the high school, middle school has two openings for the 1999-2001 term. If you will have children at the school for the next two years, consider running for one of these important positions.

To run for a position, submit a paragraph about yourself by Tuesday, March 30, to the PSO Nominating Committee, c/o Susan Galligan, 31 Border St. For more information, call Galligan at 383-0765.

Post prom committee organizes

The Cohasset Post Prom Party Committee has had several organization meetings during the past month. The next meeting will be Tuesday, March 30, in the Cohasset High School cafeteria. Co-chairpersons Linda Bolster and Betty O'Sullivan have come up with a hard working and creative team to plan this year's special event. Pat Baird, Michelle Laney and Dee Dee Nicynski are the artistic decoration chairpersons. Jane Goff and Gail Stevens are in charge of fundraising initiatives and Karen Hettstrom and Carol Sasso will be in charge of Entertainment and Raffle Donations. The chaperone chairperson is Jeanne Quigley and publicity is being organized by Betsy Connolly. The Pre-Prom Reception chairpersons are Kathy Gray and Susan Pile and the breakfast is led by Karla Watts.

Each of these committees is in need of additional members. If you would like to help in any way, call Linda Bolster at 383-6148 or Betty O'Sullivan at 383-9113.

DC government conference

Stephen Reynolds, a student at Cohasset High. recently took part in the Presidential Classroom Scholars Program in Washington, D.C. Stephen joined 394 high school juniors and seniors from 34 states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and Canada. The students spent a week meeting with government leaders and learning about the democratic process firsthand.

Highlight for the week included seminars led by Father O'Donovan, president of Georgetown University; Ann Compton, ABC News White House correspondent and Michael Powell, commissioner for the Federal Communications Commission. The group also enjoyed visits to foreign embassies, a private briefing at CIA headquarters and a performance by the political satire troupe, the Capital Steps. Students rounded out the week with appointments in the offices of their Senators and Representatives on Capital Hill.

Raffle ticket sends Cohasset couple to Rome

Annual spelling bee is April 6

By Mary Sheppard
FOR THE COHASSET EDUCATION FOUNDATION

When the Hajjars' winning number and name were called out at last year's Cohasset Education Foundation spelling bee, many people who know the family clapped and cheered. More than one person was anxious to race home and call with the good news — the couple was going to Rome.

But the caller who got through was met with a sleepy, skeptical Jean Hajjar.

"I was in bed," she said. "I had had one of those days where by nine o'-clock at night, I was saying goodnight. The last thing on my mind was the possibility of winning the trip."

But once the news sunk in, the Hajjars started making plans.

Jean's mother was born in Italy, and a trip there was an eventual sojourn she and her husband, Steve, were planning to make in the next ten years or so.

"When you have kids, it's hard to take the time to go away alone with your husband. I always wanted to go to Italy, but there were always other things to think about. I never thought the CEF would be the reason for us to go sooner rather than later."

This year's CEF spelling bee is April 6 at Cohasset High. That means raffle tickets are one sale once again for a trip abroad, this time to Madrid, Spain.

Jean Hajjar, the mother of three, said CEF is a great organization.

"I always buy tickets if it's for a good cause," Jean Hajjar said. "The CEF is a good cause."

Ironically, Hajjar said that she didn't even know the trip's destination when she bought the ticket.

"I didn't really pay attention because I never win anything," she said.

The Hajjars decided to extend their stay in Italy to eight nights, and include Venice and Florence in their itinerary. They left soon after school was out last June.

Shopping for clothes beforehand became a creative venture. Jean said they bought lots of clothes that would fit into Rome's urban scene.

"And, walking shoes were mandatory," Jean said. "Of course, once we got there, the only people in sneakers were American tourists.

"Americans, I hate to say, are slobs," Jean laughed. "We like to be comfortable. Jeans, sweats, whatever. You don't see sloppiness in Rome. Everyone is dressed to the nines."

She couldn't get over seeing men in expensive Italian suits riding mopeds to work.

"There are so many mopeds! And taxis, trucks, buses, pedestrians. Modern things. Then, all of a sudden, there you are, after walking in a direction for awhile, standing in the middle of an ancient ruin."

Language was not a serious barrier, Jean recalled.

"My father had said, 'Don't worry about speaking English. Everybody speaks English. You'll be fine.' But, not a lot of people spoke English. I had to keep saying 'Excuse me' in Italian which sounds like 'Skoosie.'" Everyone, however, was helpful and nice."

Jean loves to dress windows as a hobby. So, naturally, her many rolls of film included shots of different windows in the several Italian cities she visited. Some windows were complete with colorful window boxes and narrow alleyways below.

"Many times in Italy," she said, "I was reminded of Boston's North End — the narrow streets, the old buildings, the flowers. Even the way the people looked and dressed."

Both of the Hajjars enjoyed Rome's public squares, which are oval in shape, where people for hundreds of thousands of years congregated to socialize.

"Steve and I had our favorite square and at night, went there just to watch people. You see couples or groups who go there for, or after, dinner, have gelato, coffee, or wine, and just talk and enjoy themselves.

Spectator sports are not a new thing to Romans. Once upon a time, screaming crowds cheered chariot races in those very public squares.

"It's one thing to study places and past civilizations, but it is almost impossible to describe the thrill you feel when you are actually in the spot where something like chariot races took place centuries ago."

There were other intrigues for the Cohasset couple.

"I think one of the most impressive experiences while we were there was the endless exposure to famous artistic masterpieces, no matter where we went," Jean said. "Room after room after room. It began to all look alike. But it was all breathtakingly beautiful and a sight to behold. It was art that I read about, knew about, saw in books. Past civilizations."

The Hajjars stayed three nights in Rome, three nights in Florence, took the train to Pisa for the day, and from there, went to Venice.

An unpleasant side to Italy, Jean said, is the common practice of gypsies stealing wallets.

"I didn't really see any of that, except for one time in Florence. There was a young, beautiful blonde woman with a baby tied across her chest in a blanket. She went up behind a couple who was standing outside the gates of a gorgeous old building. I just had a feeling she was up to no good. The couple wasn't paying attention. I yelled 'Hey, watch it.' The woman sped off. I guess it happens a lot. But other than that, we felt safe."

Hajjar said that she and her family have traveled to many beautiful and interesting places, but their trip to Italy has been the best trip yet.

"I'm buying raffle tickets again this year. I guess I learned that you really never know when you're going to win," she smiled.

Community Center to present 1999 kitchen tour

If the first signs of spring have you thinking of home improvement projects, then the South Shore Community Center has just the thing to add inspiration to your thoughts. On April 9, the center will again present its popular Kitchen Tour of area homes from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The 1999 Kitchen Tour will feature five beautifully decorated homes and their equally wonderful and interesting kitchens and settings.

As in past years, each home will spotlight formal and informal tablescapes by area interior designers, or the homeowners themselves, as well as tempting taste treats by some of the South Shore's finest caterers.

Shuttle service to several of the homes will be offered from the Lightkeeper's Residence where coffee and sweets will be available throughout the tour day, and where a number of home, lifestyle and specialty and craft purveyors will have displays and items for sale.

Advance tickets may be purchased at the center or by calling (781) 383-0088. Tickets are $20 through April 1. Beginning April 2, tickets will be $25 per person. In addition to tour admission, each ticket offers the holder the chance to win one of five gourmet gift baskets donated by A Matter of Taste of Scituate. Additional chances on the baskets may be purchased for $1 a chance or six chances for $5. The specially designed baskets will be displayed, one at each home, throughout the day of the tour. Tickets for the tour are limited, so early purchase is suggested.

For more information about the 199 Kitchen Tour or any of the center's programs, stop by the center at 3 North Main Street or call (781) 383-0088.

LIBRARY CORNER

A sad farewell

The staff and trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library were saddened to hear of the death of Connie Jones, a former staff member. Mrs. Jones worked at the Beechwood Branch of the library from 1949-1957 and then at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library from 1957-1968. Many library users will remember that Mrs. Jones worked for many years as assistant to librarian Sarah Heywood.

Condolences to her husband Ashley Jones and to her family.

Spring celebration at Paul Pratt

Come and join in the spring celebration at the children's room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Choose a colorful Easter egg from our big wheelbarrow full of Easter grass and eggs. Open it up and find a surprise of either mini-marshmallows or maybe a cute little baby chick (not live, of course)! It's yours to take home, so come in while supplies last!

The library says thank you to Cohasset Hardware for the use of the wheelbarrow; Kara Bianchi for the donation of Easter grass and eggs; and to Jessica Husband for her donation of chicks and eggs.

Artist of the Month

The current artist on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is watercolorist Helen James Gallop of Cohasset.

Gallop graduated from the School of Practical Art in Boston and studied under Lester Stevens. She later became a commercial artist for an advertising agency and did free lance work for a trade magazine.

When Gallop moved to Cohasset, she became a member of the South Shore Art Center and took refresher courses over the years. She has won many awards and is a gallery artist at the Art Center. Her paintings have been hung in shows from Cohasset to Gloucester.

Gallop chooses her subjects carefully and works to design a pleasing composition utilizing strong light and shadows. She applies transparent wet in wet technique which allows paint to mix and blend. "Every painting is a problem solving challenge which fascinates me as I watch my work grow from a sketch to a watercolor," says Gallop.

Come in and see a very vibrant display which continues until the end of March.

Land taking for water tank is back on table

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Like time travelers caught in a temporal loop of repeating events, the water commission is once again prepared to take a half-acre of land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain to build a new water tank. Last month, the water commissioners felt comfortable that they had reached a deal with Joe Susi of J. Michael Susi and Sons, the owner of the land, to purchase the half-acre. One month before that, the water commissioners were pretty sure they would have to take the land by eminent domain. On many other occasions, the water commission has considered purchasing the land or taking it.

The water commissioners believe the time has come when they can wait no longer. Water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the problem is that they haven't heard from Susi for several weeks. McNabb said the water commissioners have been waiting to hear whether Susi is going to accept their offer to purchase the half-acre for $32,500 or come back with a counter-offer. McNabb said the water commission wants to build the tank by August, 2000 and can't wait out any more delays. At their April 1 meeting, the water commissioners may vote to seize the land by legal right unless Susi contacts them beforehand, McNabb said.

"Our problem, basically, is that there have been too many delays," McNabb said. "We're not trying to be heavy-handed, and we're not trying to make him [Susi] do anything he doesn't want to do. But we should have had it done by now and sent the project out to bid."

If the water commissioners vote to seize the land, they have to give Susi 30 days notice of their intentions. McNabb said voting to take the land on April 1 will allow the water commission to own the property around May 15.

"The 30 day notification gives Susi time to deal in good faith and make an offer," McNabb said. "We don't want to use eminent domain and we don't know of any problems or disagreements on his part. We're not telling Susi that he has to take our price. We just haven't heard from him and we can't wait any longer."

Members of the water commission have been trying build a new water tank for more than two years. The water commissioners originally wanted to build the second tank on Bear Hill next to the town's only other water container. But residents living in view of the tank opposed the proposal vigorously. So the water commission began looking at suggestions to build the tank on Scituate Hill at the old 62-acre Norfolk Conveyor site.

Last month, the water commission believed it had reached a deal with Susi to purchase the land on the 62-acre Scituate Hill site for a 1.8 million gallon steel water tank. The deal included an agreement to share future communications antenna rights for the top of the structure.

The water commissioners have been trying to purchase the land, rather than take it by eminent domain, to avoid a costly lawsuit in the future. Susi could not prevent the water commission from taking the land by eminent domain, but he could sue the town for financial restitution if he disagreed with the purchase price. Governments are required by law to pay fair market for property seized by eminent domain.

The water commissioners preferred buying the land because then they would know the exact cost of the project. McNabb said the deal to purchase the land could have could have left the water commission with a cash surplus of as much as $500,000.

The water commission estimates the cost of building the 1.8 million gallon steel tank at about $1.065 million. The tank would be 65 feet high and 70 feet in diameter. The water commission has set aside $1.6 million for the tank. McNabb said any money not spent on the actual tank project could be used to fund other projects and keep water bills at current levels

The water commission also need another half-acre of land for an access road and pipe. The water commissioners are working on a separate deal to build an access road on a half-acre of land located on an adjacent property owned by Paul Barry through his Crocker II Realty Trust. McNabb said the commissioners are working with Barry to obtain the land for the road in exchange for providing him with two connection stubs from the water pipe that carries water from the tank to dwellings. The pipe would run directly under the 20-30 foot wide access road. The deal with Barry is going well, McNabb said. The water commission is finalizing the location of the road on Barry's property

Make town meeting user friendly

TO THE EDITOR:

Town Meeting — "Mend it, don't end it." Our next Town Meeting will feature votes on reforming the town meeting process in rather dramatic fashion. We will be asked to approve a process whereby some spending issues will have to pass at Town Meeting and then go on to survive a town-wide election as well.

This is being proposed to make Town Meeting more representative and less easily dominated by "special interest" groups. Those concerns are valid and need to be addressed. Many people cannot attend Town Meeting due to family requirements. Many others choose not to attend because the process is so lengthy and "interest groups" seem to have votes "wired" in advance.

Yet, even with these faults, Town Meeting has much to offer. Other systems are undoubtedly more efficient, but they take away the citizen's direct voice in local affairs. Town Meeting gives everyone that voice. Perhaps there are some rather simple things that could be done to address some of the concerns about Town Meeting without fundamentally changing its structure. Here are a few suggestions, which are probably not new and may not all be feasible.

1. Make Town Meeting Family Friendly.

If you have young children, you may be very concerned about votes on issues such as school funding, but at least one parent is going to have to stay at home to watch the kids. Why not provide day care? Better yet, why not have teachers from the schools volunteer for day care or even make the Town Meeting date a regular school day? Teachers have a great deal riding on Town Meeting votes. Why not have a school day on a Saturday in the spring for Town Meeting to make up for snow days during the winter, rather than wasting summer vacation days tacked on to the school year in June? Teachers should jump at the chance (out of their own self-interest), and the kids might even get a good civics lessen by watching Town Meeting on TV during part of the school day.

2. Move Along Quickly.

Many non-controversial articles can now go through quickly by "unanimous consent." That is a good step in the right direction. We can do more to speed up the meeting by teeing up the issues in advance. Controversial issues should be discussed and debated in advance at public hearings prior to Town Meeting. These could be televised and reported on in the local press. Actual debate at Town Meeting could then be sharpened and many questions would be eliminated.

Recommendations by the selectmen and the Advisory Committee could be clear, published in advance and not repeated at the meeting. If individual members of the Selectmen or Advisory Committee want to voice their opinions, they can do so during debate.

Eliminate testimonials. Recognizing people is great. Town Meeting is not the place to do it. Let the selectmen pass the kudos out.

Strictly enforce time limits on debate. If the great windbags in the U.S. Congress can do it, we can too. And limit a proponent of an article to one presentation. We do not need endless rebuttal every time two sides disagree. Wield the gavel vigorously. Such procedure may not fit the Norman Rockwell image, but it may be the only way Town Meeting can survive in our more complex times.

3. Advertise/Promote/Cajole.

We can do more to "get out the vote." Effective mailings can go out to all registered voters. Budget issues can be explained in plain English so that people can actually understand what is at stake. Eliminate confusing or arcane terms like "Free Cash" (I sure wish I could get some of that). Cut through some of the "budget speak," so that people can understand what is being proposed, what the impact on taxes will be, and what the options are. If state subsidies are a factor, require some kind of objective disclosure of the likelihood of obtaining the subsidies. If an article has to be worded in unintelligible legalese, make sure that there is a plain English translation published in advance. If all of this costs a few bucks, that is money well spent and will probably save tax dollars in the long run.

The selectmen could establish a policy that anyone who serves on a town board or commission, or who serves on the board of an organization that gets financial assistance from the town, should attend Town Meeting and stay for the duration. This is obviously not strictly enforceable, but it could be something published on the ballot when someone runs for reelection or considered by the selectmen when making appointments or continuing financial assistance.

Make sure that any Town Meeting takes place within a week of the deadline for making tax payments.

4. "Special Interests."

Groups, who can rally folks to attend Town Meeting and vote a certain way on a certain issue, are just making democracy work. They are hardly akin to the "Gucci Gulch" lobbyists in Washington and on Beacon Hill. There are some problems, though, with special interest muscle at Town Meeting.

Eliminate quick "calls of the question." Do not let a special interest majority stifle debate by essentially saying, "We have the votes, just get this thing over with."

Do not let public money be used for mailings or other promotional efforts aimed at Town Meeting voters by a board or commission. Voters can be turned off by thinking that an issue is "wired" in advance. Why go to Town Meeting if that is the case?

A few of these ideas might reduce the need for more major reforms.

Housing Authority thanks Sheriff's Office

The Cohasset Housing Authority presented a plaque and a letter of appreciation to Sheriff Micheal G. Bellotti, thanking him and his office for the community service work completed by inmates from the Braintree and Dedham Alternative Centers.

Several teams of inmates completed the work at the Cohasset Housing Authority in five weeks, saving the town more than $10,000. The inmates painted the hallways of the 16 units at the Housing Authority, as well as its Community Center.

"The Community Service Program is a plus for everyone,'" said Sheriff Bellotti. "The town wins because they get work that might not otherwise be done. And it's good for the correctional system because the inmates are given the opportunity to improve their work skills, which will help them reintegrate into society."

"It was my dream for 14 years to get these hallways painted, but I could never get the money," said Vin Mascioli, manager of the units. "This program has really helped us."

Each inmate chosen for the Community Service Program must pass a screening by the Sheriff's Office classification staff and be interviewed by the program directors. The inmates in the program live in the minimum-security alternative centers in Braintree and Dedham and many are approaching the end of their sentence.

Since the program's inception in 1985, inmates have worked more than 5,600 hours on a number of projects in Cohasset.

The residents of the Housing Authority also presented certificates to William Draicchio, Chad Rossi and Mark Falzone, who supervised the inmates.

POLICE LOG, PAGE 23

Police made 14 arrests last month

For a short month, February was surprisingly busy for the Police Department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During February, there were a total of 14 arrests. Two arrests were for assault and battery, one involving A&B on a Police Officer in conjunction with an O.U.I. arrest. There were three Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol arrests. Five arrests were for outstanding warrants, two were motor vehicle violations and finally there were two Protective Custody arrests.

There were four breaking and enterings during the month of February. All four were businesses located in the same building.

During the month of February, the department received a total of 567 calls for service. Of those, 95 were E-9-1-1 calls.

OBITUARIES

Charles H. Jones

Charles H. Jones, 96, of West Falmouth, formerly of Milton, Cohasset and seasonally of Abaco, Bahamas, died Wednesday, March 10, at his home following a long illness. He was husband of the late Margaret (French) Jones, who died in 1983 after 55 years of marriage.

Born in Weston, Mass. March 28, 1902, son of the late Charles H. and Bessie (Roberts) Jones, he was a 1919 graduate of the Andover Academy. Mr. Jones went on to study economics and business at Dartmouth College, graduating in 1923, continuing studies for a year at Harvard Business School.

For the next 44 years he was employed in the shoe manufacturing industry. During many of those years he was the C.E.O. for Bostonian Shoe (Commonwealth Shoe & Leather Co. of Whitman). He also served as president of the National Shoe Manufacturing Association in the early 1960s. Retired in 1967, the Jones' moved to his late home in West Falmouth.

In addition to his family and work, he enjoyed time spent sailboat racing, skiing and deer hunting in Maine and New Brunswick. Well into his retirement, admittedly too late in life, he tried sea kayaking with his son Charles of Auburn, Maine.

Mr. Jones was a member of the Chi Phi fraternity at Dartmouth College, the Chapoquoit Yacht Club, Falmouth Yacht Club, Eastern Yacht Club of Marblehead, Cohasset Yacht Club and the Sailing Club of Hope Town, Abaco Bahamas.

Throughout the years and well into his 90s, he attended various Protestant churches in Eastern Mass. and in the Bahamas.

He leaves a son, Charles H. Jones Jr. of Auburn, Maine; a daughter, Leslie Jackson of West Falmouth; seven grandchildren, Michael Jackson Jr. of Southborough, Mass., Arden Marie Silvers of Washington, Jennifer Jackson of Hopedale, Mass., Timothy T. Jackson of Falmouth, Mass., Daniel C. Jones of Hanover, Deborah Cerretani of Beverly Farms and Leslie Gutierrez Jones of Santa Barbara, Calif.; 11 great-grandchildren; and several nephews and nieces. He was brother of the late Paul Jones Sr., Elizabeth McShery and Harriet Sinclair, all formerly of West Falmouth.

Private funeral arrangements are under the direction of the Whittier-Porter Funeral Home of Ipswich.

Hingham woman at the helm of 44th arts festival

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

When Julianna Lovell saw the advertisement for a new Festival on the Common coordinator for the South Shore Art Center last November, she jumped at the chance.

"I had moved to Hingham last June, and thought it might be nice to work in the South Shore community rather than commuting by boat into Boston three times a week," she said. "Frankly, I was getting seasick."

A resume and interview with executive director Dillon Bustin led to Lovell's place at the art center, where getting this June's festival on track is her greatest concern.

The festival offers three exhibitions — one that's juried, an open members' show, and one for children. There will also be vendors, musicians, ad hoc sculpture by local artist Chris Hidell that visitors can paint, the Second Congregational Church's Strawberry Festival, toy boat-sailing on the duck pond, the South Shore Men of Harmony, a trolley from the Music Circus to accommodate extra parking needs, and more.

"For Cohasset and surrounding towns, the festival is like a party that occurs in the last week of the school," said Dillon. "There is a sense of relief and release, the warm weather is here, it's daylight, springtime obligations are over and high-spirited hordes are in good moods and ready to shop around and enjoy the music and food on the grounds."

Monica McKenney, director of development and public relations, counts on sponsors, 40 in all, to support the festival, such as BankBoston, Stop & Shop and Sullivan Bros., as well as local benefactors David and Lois Weltman, Peter and Leah Roy and Glenn A. Pratt.

"It's something people know, love and have been part of for years," she said.

Volunteers also lend a hand with duties ranging from staffing the children's tent to greeting visitors at the archways.

"I saw something about it in the local paper and was impressed by the number of activities going on and that it was for people of all ages — I like going to arts events as much as producing them,."

— Julianna Lovell, festival coordinator

Though Lovell says the entire process of pulling the festival together has been both "exciting and scary," Dillon has no doubts about her ability to manage.

"Julianna has a graduate degree in arts administration as well as a lot of compatible experience in community arts in Boston and Vermont," said Bustin. "She also came to us with good references."

Bustin is also not concerned with Lovell's newness, since his first festival was June of 1997, when he had only been on the job for a few weeks.

"I was walking around the festival like a tourist," he recalled.

Lovell replaces nine-year festival coordinator Rhonda Myers, who made herself available to the novice for all questions.

"Rhonda thought ahead for me," said Lovell. "She filled me in on details such as bringing a hammer and a towel in the trunk of my car to put the signs out at the beginning of the festival."

Lovell has also had to call on Myers for vendors who call and say, "I'd like my usual spot."

Though she has maps, Lovell does not have an "institutional memory" of prior festivals to draw on and so she must rely on Myers's help for some of the more ingrained aspects of the event, like returning vendors.

Lovell first read about the arts festival when she moved to Hingham from Newton last year.

"I saw something about it in the local paper and was impressed by the number of activities going on and that it was for people of all ages — I like going to arts events as much as producing them," she said. "But when you move, you can't find your toothbrush, never mind finding your way to a festival.

"The awkward part of this is that people here ask me where I live and I say, 'Hingham,' and then they say, 'Isn't the festival wonderful?' and I say, 'Actually, I've never been.' Usually, it's okay once they realize I've run festivals before and that I have been in arts administration for years."

Though a Massachusetts native, Lovell had moved with her family not only to Vermont, but also North Carolina. She herself attended a preparatory school in New York.

She received her BA from Simmons College and went on for a masters in art history because her mother had pestered her to take at least a few courses on the subject in her undergraduate studies; once she did, she was hooked.

"I played the viola for a number of years but found my way into art history because of my mother's nagging," she said. "I found that I loved it. I then ran theater in Vermont for nine years at Casteleton State College, Vt. I did theater makeup and produced theater, but never was an actress. I'm more of a backstage person."

Lovell's first festival began with a tasteless joke rooted in Rutland, Vt.'s quarrying history.

"I lived in Rutland, an old marble quarry town where the owners of the quarries had sent out a large boat to Ireland for workers, and once they'd 'Americanized' and expected decent pay, they sent another boat out to Poland to pick up a fresh batch of immigrants," she explained. "One day, someone joked to me that the reason Rutland had such an easy zip code was so that the Polish residents could remember it."

The town of 30,000 had very little diversity, but the first Rutland Ethnic Festival was intent on celebrating it anyway. It drew in a small pocket of local Asian-Americans, African-Americans from other parts of the state and, of course, Irish and Polish townspeople.

"It was a great way for everyone there to celebrate diversity," she said. "We had food, music, and a variety of crafts."

Lovell also worked on the National Dance Project for the New England Foundation for the Arts, a regional arts organization in Boston.

She thinks that the worst of her new job is not knowing what to do and imagines herself, three days before the festival, not having all the crafters' pieces yet.

This year's festival has been marketed to crafters in the New England regions and other national publications so that professional crafters from as far away as Florida, Maryland, Missouri and Arizona have applied.

Jewelry, interesting glass and acrylic on wood surfaces, painted mobiles and ceramics are only some of the interesting art forms that have been submitted to the juried festival.

"It's Cohasset Common, with the view of the ocean and then this classic New England festival in the middle of it; it's a classic New England event," said McKenney, summing it up.

Lovell points out that Cohasset is a great town with a great sense of community.

"It's going to go great," she said. "I've been planning for this event since my first interview with Dillon."

The 1999 Festival on the Common will be held June 18, 19 and 20.

Julianna Lovell of Hingham is coordinator of the 44th annual Festival on the Common, sponsored by the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

Festival on the Common jury panel members:

The jury looks at the entire pool of applicants who submit their work captured on slides or photographs, and the jury uses their artistic expertise and background to pick the highest quality crafts in the selection.

Nancy Sandell, from Cohasset, is a SSAC board member. She is an art collector and is involved with Cohasset Education Foundation.

Gretchen Keyworth is the Director of the Crafts in the Castle craft show in Boston. This show is one of the preeminent crafts shows in the country.

Karen Larsen. A fiber artist for more than 25 years, Karen Larsen divides her time between being a maker of Studio Art Quilts, and working as a theatrical designer. Most of her work in the latter discipline is in the field of puppetry for both children and adults. Her MFA is in Theatrical Design, with an emphasis on Costume Design, and she has served as both a site reporter in theatre for the National Endowment for the Arts, and as Vice President of Puppeteers of America, the national puppetry organization.

As an Art Quilt maker, her work has been seen in numerous national and international exhibits, including both Quilt National 1991 and 1993, and in several publications. She has had four solo exhibitions of her work in recent years, and her wall quilt "Out of the Dark of Winter, and into the Boisterous Spring" was given a two-page spread in Robert Shaw's comprehensive 1997 book "The Art Quilt". She was a founding director of The Fiber Art Focus Group (a collective of Fiber Art professionals) and has served on numerous local and national adjudication panels and juries. She resides in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Leon I. Nigrosh is a ceramic artist whose home/studio is in Worcester, Mass. His handmade work in fine porcelain luster can be found in many private collections. Mr. Nigrosh holds a BFA in Ceramics from Rhode Island School of Design and an MFA in ceramics from Rochester Institute of Technology. He has taught for a number of years at Clark University in Worcester; Rhode Island College and the Worcester Center for Crafts.

Mr. Nigrosh's latest commission is a large ceramic wall work for the JCC in Springfield, MA. Other recent public commissions include a porcelain wall mural for the Worcester Historical Museum and a porcelain signature wall for the Family Health Center in Barre, MA.

Mr. Nigrosh is a respected author. The revised and expanded third edition of "Claywork: form and idea in ceramic design", was published by Davis Publications in Worcester. He has written two other ceramics books titled "Low Fire: other ways to work in clay" and "Sculpting Clay".

St. Anthony's gets its money back

First Amendment discussion ensues

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Concerned that wording would open the door to exempting all non-profits from building permit fees, town meeting Saturday nixed an article that would allow selectmen to waive the fees.

But at the same time, voters passed an article giving $14,000 back to St. Anthony's church, which was the amount of the building permit fee charged for its $1.4M parish center currently under construction. Articles are items of business that come before town meeting. Saturday's session drew 300 voters in the morning but only about 100 stayed until the meeting adjourned at about 5 p.m.

"The town is limited to what it can do to support religious organizations."
—Town Counsel Paul DeRensis

As it stands now, any non-profit — including churches wanting a building permit fee waived — will have to take the issue to town meeting.

But town meeting must vote to exempt all non-profits or similar organizations from fees assessed in that particular fiscal year or risk running amok of the First Amendment of the Constitution, town counsel Paul DeRensis said.

"The town is limited to what it can do to support religious organizations," DeRensis said. "You've got to demonstrate, however, you treat religious organizations the same way you treat every other comparable non-religious group."

The controversy over building permit fees started last fall, when selectmen, citing a nine-year-old policy, declined to waive the fee for the St. Anthony's parish center project. As it turned out, St. Anthony's was the first church since inception of the no-waive-fee policy for non-profits, to conduct a major building project and seek a waiver.

Parishioners took umbrage at selectmen's intransigence and decided to take their case to town meeting.

In the meantime, town counsel discovered selectmen didn't actually have the right to waive fees — or enact them for that matter — because the town had never accepted the proper state statute and adopted a subsequent town by-law giving them that power.

But only half of that housekeeping matter passed muster with voters at Saturday's session of town meeting.

While town meeting voted to give selectmen the power to set fees, those in attendance did not give them the ability to waive fees because of fears it would open to door to all non-profits including the Cohasset Yacht Club, Music Circus and Cohasset Golf Club.

Former selectman Michael Sullivan of Gammons Road asked the Town meeting denies Cohasset Plaza plans

Re-zoning request nixed

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Despite a recount, the results remained the same: resident and developer Donald Staszko lost his bid for a 200-foot business zone expansion for his Cohasset Plaza on 3A, which would have allowed for a 15,000 square foot expansion of the Super Stop & Shop and the addition of a 32,000 square foot retail store at the site.

The land in question is currently zoned residential. Staszko wanted it rezoned as highway business.

The 61-to-49 hand count that defeated the article at Monday's session of town meeting followed arguments by planning board chairman Al Moore. The zoning article needed a 2/3 majority to pass.

"The planning board is unanimously opposed to the motion," said Moore. "No one is disagreeing that Staszko has done a fine job at the plaza, but zoning is forever and it goes with the land, so the decision made tonight will be with us 100 years from now."

Moore pointed out that with the override looming, it might be appealing to view the proposed expansion

Town's tough parking regulations

Stringent by-law an asset, planners say

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Finding a parking spot at one of the town's shopping areas is an interesting exercise that depends on the time of year. Consider the situation at Stop & Shop. Sometimes the parking lot at Stop & Shop is so empty that it resembles a sprawling, asphalt flatland. Then there are times like the day before Thanksgiving when it's almost impossible to find a parking space. Whether it's Christmas Day or the day before Thanksgiving, one thing that's certain is that the town's bylaws ensure that new retail developments have adequate parking for all times of year.

Controversy over parking space is nothing new to planning board Chairman Al Moore. Developers frequently complain that Cohasset's standards are too strict for reasonable development. Developers favor building a lot based on the 10th busiest business day of the year. Cohasset's bylaws require parking lots based on the busiest day of the year.

In other cases, residents have complained that more parking spaces just translate into excess pavement. Moore said he is aware that some people have complained that the new retail parking lots, like

Fire OT account is beefed up

Town manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen last week that the town fire department's overtime account is down to $1,000.

"It's crucial that article 6 passes on Saturday," he said.

Article 6 asked the town to appropriate funds to cover fire overtime and other FY99 budgetary needs.

Haddad got his wish. Town meeting approved article 6 so the fire department will have up to $30K to cover overtime costs for the remainder of the fiscal year, which ends June 30.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, April 6.

Immunization requirements for children

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League of Cohasset are presenting a program on the new immunization requirements for children. This program will be of particular interest to the parents of children entering kindergarten and seventh grade. The speaker will be Nancy Harrington, R.N., M.S., an epidemiologist with the Mass. Dept. of Public Health. She will also address people's concerns regarding the new varicella (chicken pox) vaccine and the new vaccine to prevent Lyme disease.

This free program will be held at the Second Congregational Church on Wednesday, April 14, at 7:30 p.m.

It is in joint cooperation with the Commonwealth of Mass. and the Merck Pharmaceutical Co.

Child psychologist to speak on parenting teenagers

David Elkind, Ph.D., Tufts University child psychologist and nationally known author of numerous books on child development, including "Parenting Your Teenager," "The Hurried Child" and "All Grown Up and No Place to Go," will speak on "Parenting Teenagers," Wednesday, April 7, 7:30-9 p.m., at Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St.

Dr. Elkind will discuss: the changes in contemporary life that have stressful effects on teenagers; how to maintain communication with your adolescent; administering "Tough Love." According to Elkind, "three changes have had particularly stressful effects upon contemporary youth. One of these is the increased freedom experienced by young people . .. also, young people today experience more loss than did those of earlier generations ... finally, the heavy emphasis on academics makes academic failure much more salient than it ever was before ... young people today are much more concerned with academic failure than with character lapses."

Selectmen divided in budget debate

Stage set for $766K override

Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Thirteen proved an unlucky number for selectman Diane Sullivan, who took some heat at town meeting Saturday when she spoke against pay increases for town and school employees. She specifically argued against the recent creation of a 13th salary step for teachers at a time when the budget is in the red and students are sharing text books.

"The teachers at their highest salary rate have had a step created for them, a 13th step, and in the business world, that wouldn't happen," she said. "These teachers were getting a 3 percent pay increase anyway, which with the 13th step brings it to almost 10 percent."

Despite objections voiced by Sullivan and her fellow selectman Thomas Callahan, voters at Saturday's town meeting approved the $21M budget proposed by town manager Mark Haddad, which will require raising the tax levy by $766K.

Should the Proposition 2 1/2 override pass when voters go to the ballot box on April 10, taxes on the average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will increase by $409.35. The override accounts for $276.31 of that increase. The anticipated tax rate for FY2000, which begins July 1, is $16.15 per $1,000 of assessed valuation.

Besides Sullivan's arguments against the school's 13th step, she also was displeased that the $350K technology budget approved last fall for the schools, which she had been lobbied for and supported, would have $150K taken from it to make up for deficits in this year's school budget.

While the school committee has argued that special education was the chief budget buster, Sullivan maintained that the school committee had not done its part to get legislators involved in providing more state funding for the school's $270,000 in special education costs.

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., supported Sullivan.

"You don't have to spend megabucks to get a good education," he said. "I don't think we have done enough to get money from the state. And if we're paying money for our students, then we're also paying for METCO students."

Owen O'Malley, 29 Sohier St., agreed with Fitzsimmons.

"We have to take a good hard look at how we're spending our money," he said. "Good feelings about how we spend our money isn't the point."

O'Malley said that the portion of the school budget that covered the health education was spent on "mostly nonsense and propaganda. Students should be taught at home about sex education and not using drugs."

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo said that the school committee was vehemently against Sullivan's motion to amend the school budget to not include the $54,000 for teachers' salary increases.

"The questions this puts to the town is, what kind of schools do you want?" he said. "Are you proud to be the 19th ranking town in the state on MCAS exams, or is it acceptable to go down? And how low?"

Betsy Connolly, who is running unopposed for a one-year term on the school committee and is a METCO representative, made an impassioned statement in defense of teachers and METCO students.

"I've been an educator for 21 years and I'm embarrassed to think that we're not willing to give our teachers a $1,200 increase as thanks for being here for years," she said. "The teachers are dedicated and hardworking. Do we live in a town where we value capitalism?"

Connolly also said that the five METCO students that she has hosted over the years have become part of her family.

"They have given us more than we could ever give them," she said.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Sullivan said that the national cost of living increase is 1.5 to 1.6 percent and that her figures — based on her understanding that there would be 26 teachers benefiting from the 13th step increase — already enjoyed a $60,000 salary with a 3.5 percent increase.

PHOTOS/BOB BURNS

Selectman Diane Sullivan offers an amendment to trim the school budget by $54,000 at Saturday's session of town meeting.

"I feel that it was intellectually dishonest for the school committee not to get up and correct Betsy Connolly when she said I was begrudging teachers a $1,200 raise," said Sullivan. "I believe that at that point in time, the school committee should have gotten up and clarified about what the number of teachers involved and what their true raise would be."

Sullivan said that she felt that it was unfair to the town to have voted without a full picture.

"People don't know that the town also gives retiring teachers a $9,000 cash 'thank you,'" said Sullivan. "I also think that people aren't thinking ahead to next year, when more people become eligible for the 13th step.

"This is so unfair to the town and they don't realize it. They didn't have all the facts and I think the school community should have given all the facts," she said. "Sixty-five percent of the teachers' benefits are paid for on the town's budget. One million dollars of their debt service is on the town budget. You have to take their budget and add these other items to get a truer reflection for what the school budget is."

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey responded to Sullivan's statement yesterday.

"Everyone is entitled to their opinion, but I'm not sure what figures her analysis is based on so I can't answer to that," he said. "I can say that the impact of the additional salary step is approximately $54,000 and from the school committee's perspective, they felt that that was doable to go forward with and they don't feel that that has a drastic impact, but was a fair settlement."

The teachers' pay scale, as is the case in a lot of public service industries, has steps that offer a certain percentage of a salary increase, depending on the number of steps (and years) the employee has completed, Malvey explained.

"This has been in existence for years and is an industry standard in education," he said. "A lot of business and industries base their employees' salaries on their own classifications so this isn't unusual. Actually, we are planning on a 14th step—it's based on the number of years of service and additional educational credits. And the $9,000 'bonus' is actually an early retirement incentive that teachers are entitled to under the state retirement policy and that, too, has been in place for years."

"The questions this puts to the town is, what kind of schools do you want?"
— Mark DeGiacomo,
school committee member

For his part, Callahan opposed the budget in terms of its broader ramifications for the next five years.

"The selectmen are not unanimously in favor of the budget, though I don't think there was any way to avoid an override," said Callahan at town meeting.. "The sky won't fall if we don't do this. There are a lot of things in our infrastructure that will need to be done and I want people to understand the ramifications of that."

Selectman Tom Callahan said the sky won't fall if the $21M budget doesn't pass.

According to Callahan, the town can anticipate a worst case scenario of four more years of general overrides.

"It's going to get worse over the next five years," he said. "Sixty percent of our budget will go to the schools and there's nothing wrong with that, but we need a broader base of revenue or we'll be back here for the next five years wringing our hands."

Callahan urged voters to enlist the aid of legislators, including State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, who was in attendance at the meeting, to gain more state funding.

Deer Hill middle-high school upgrades to take first step

$7M projects on the horizon

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Town meeting set the stage Saturday to upgrade the Deer Hill and middle-high schools.

Voters approved borrowing $250K for professional services to develop construction drawings and bid documents to renovate the aging school buildings, both built more than 40 years ago.

The issue will likely come back to the special town meeting in the fall when a debt exclusion override may be needed for the estimated $7 million projects.

Although the article easily obtained the 2/3 vote necessary Saturday, some wanted assurances the school department would maintain the buildings in the future.

A 2/3 vote was necessary because the article - or item of business before town meeting — involved borrowing.

"We need to figure a way to make do with what we have. How can we make do with less and not meet every nuance of a building code?"
— Robert Sturdy,
270 Jerusalem Road

"We're being asked to spend an awful lot of money," said Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., who pointed out the crumbling stairs leading to the high school building as an example of poor maintenance. "Who is going to guarantee the buildings will be maintained? The school committee has dropped the ball."

School Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey, who came on board in August, described the lack of maintenance as "benign neglect" by a school department with other priorities.

"No one consciously said, 'let's not upgrade,'" he said.

But Malvey stressed that times had changed. New state rules require a maintenance plan is put into effect and that has to be addressed.

Robert Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road, said for $250K, an architect will no doubt come up with an exorbitant wish list.

"The town cannot afford just to pour money into a wish list," he said.

Sturdy urged the town to set some priorities or risk running the elderly out of town.

"We need to figure a way to make do with what we have. How can we make do with less and not meet every nuance of a building code?"

Rob Spofford, chairman of the school building committee, said the architects would be charged with coming up with the best project for the town.

"We're asking you to appropriate the money so we can make intelligent decisions," he said. Spofford said the $7M figure is an estimate and could be lower or higher. The architects will also determine how much of the project could be eligible for state reimbursement. Construction costs for the new $10M Osgood School are reimbursable by about 60 percent.

Facilities audit determined need

The town appropriated $25K at the Oct. 1997 special town meeting for a facilities audit of all municipal buildings, Town Manager Mark Haddad explained at Saturday's town meeting. The audit recommended $13M in repairs to town buildings over the next 10 years. The buildings included the Deer Hill and middle high schools, police & fire stations, town hall and library.

Haddad said the subcommittee studying building maintenance concurred that the Deer Hill and middle-high schools were a priority. The buildings need serious upgrades and must be brought up to compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), a federal law.

He said architects hired with the $250K, appropriated at Saturday's session of town meeting, will be required to determine if any of the work is eligible for reimbursement through the state school building assistance bureau.

St. Anthony's to get its permit fee back matter be postponed until the legal issues could be resolved.

"To adopt it opens up Pandora's Box," he said about the article giving selectmen the power to waive fees.

But Martin Corry of Pleasant Street, a proponent of the article to refund St. Anthony's fee, asked town meeting to bring closure to that part of the matter.

"The goal I'd like to see is that St. Anthony's is reimbursed," he said.

Dick Avery, chairman of the advisory committee, said no fees should be waived. He explained that when fees are waived the broad base of taxpayers picks up the tab. Avery suggested that those belonging to the various institutions ante up.

"We should support the institutions we join as best we can," he said.

That message struck a chord with Neil Glick of Spring Street and David McMorris of Doane Street.

"The clear message here is that this is not legal," Glick said. "The separation of church and state is embedded in the Constitution.

"We are defacto (violating this) by giving assistance to a religious organization."

David McMorris said everyone belongs to one institution or another that could be assessed a building fee and worried the town would end up expending legal fees if it started waiving fees for certain organizations and not others.

"Why do it at all?" he asked.

Selectman Tom Callahan said there is no difference between a private citizen paying a building permit fee or a non-profit.

"The issue to waive fees is an all or nothing situation," he said. "In my own view, I have a problem distinguishing between a private property owner or a non-profit or just you or me.

"St. Anthony's is charged the same fee — 1 percent of the cost of construction — as I would be on my house. It is part of the cost of doing business," he said.

Ann Musto of Lantern Lane took exception to Callahan's remarks.

She said the congregation of a religious facility is by and large made up of taxpayers.

"It's totally different," she said.

In the end, town meeting gave selectmen the power to set fees but not waive them.

DeRensis, the town counsel, explained following Saturday's session that although selectmen did not have the right to set fees until the vote, an argument could be made that the fees charged up to this point are lawful because they've been charging them for a long time.

Selectmen also set fees for liquor licenses, one-day liquor licenses, beach parking and RTF stickers.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town only assessed one building permit fee in FY'99 for a non-profit and that was the $14K fee for St. Anthony's.

First Parish Church is planning a $750K renovation of its parish house later this year. If it wants a waiver, the church would have to come to town meeting for a refund of the $7,500 building permit fee. If any other non-profits pay building fees in FY00, they would also be eligible for a refund under the same article before town meeting, DeRensis said.

Air conditioning, driveway funds

Saturday's session of town meeting approved $244K to complete the new Osgood School. About $190K of that figure will be used to finish air conditioning the school which opened last fall.

$50K of the remainder of the money may be used to construct a temporary driveway at the Deer Hill School to solve a safety issue there.

Voters were in favor of appropriating the money because about 60 percent will be reimbursed by the state but they were not necessarily endorsing the driveway project.

Dan Evans of the advisory committee said the school facilities committee would have the say on where the money goes and that it should be spent "intelligently."

"Technology should be considered," he said. "But do not let this discussion confuse us on whether we take the opportunity to get 40 cents on the dollar to complete the (school) project."

The joint Deer Hill-Osgood schools driveway is presenting safety concerns because some parents are passing standing school buses either loading or unloading children at Deer Hill in their rush to get to Osgood. Osgood is located behind the Deer Hill School.

The school facilities committee said a permanent solution to the problem would occur when the driveway is reconfigured as part of the upgrade to the Deer Hill School.

Dick Avery, chairman of the advisory committee, addresses town meeting.

Money to sewer Lily Pond homes

Town meeting appropriated $1.3M to pay for connecting 24 homes near Lily Pond to the town sewer. The appropriation is contingent on the success of a Prop.2-1/2 debt exclusion override at the polls on April 10. If the override passes, taxpayers will pick up 1/2 the cost of the project, which will add 3 cents to the tax rate. If the override fails the users will pay for the entire sewer project through betterments.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild explained that the town had no choice about whether or not to sewer the homes.

"The town agreed to do this as part of an agreement for judgment with the state and also for important environmental reasons," he said.

Health board chairman Kevin Ulmer said it made more sense to sewer these homes than work with on-site systems so close to Lily Pond.

Louis Eaton of Beach Street said the project seemed expensive.

"Two or three of my neighbors spent $50,000 to comply with regulations of Title 5. To spend $1.3 million so that 24 homes will pass seems a lot of money for a few connections," he said.

But Betsy Connolly of Lily Pond Lane said she had an $92K estimate for an above ground system.

Taxpayer articles are defeated

Two articles proposed by Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, a grassroots tax watchdog group, failed at Saturday's town meeting.

The first would have made approval of financial articles over a certain amount, a two-step process. The articles would first have to pass muster at town meeting and then by a subsequent ballot vote. The reason behind the article, CCT said, is that town meeting is too easily stacked with special interest groups. A ballot vote would be a fairer way to appropriate taxpayer dollars, CCT said.

Dick Avery, chairman of the advisory committee, said the article needed more study.

David McMorris, 89 Doane St., said he thought town meeting worked well despite the low turnout because those in attendance fully air the issues.

"It is a preferable system to the easy system of five minutes in the ballot box," he said.

The second CCT article would have created a binding initiative petition process for the town. The process would require that citizens collect signatures of 15 percent of registered voters in town and at least 1/3 of the registered voters would have to turn out at the election. Then the matter would have to win a simple majority of votes cast to be enacted.

This article won the backing of a majority of the advisory committee. Member Dan Evans said, "it is a perfectly safe way for a substantial amount of people to direct the will of the town."

Nevertheless, the article failed to win enough support at town meeting.

Selectmen said a local initiative petition process is being addressed at the state level and needed more study.

Fate of Independence Building

Town meeting unanimously approved to authorize the board of selectmen to "convey, sell or otherwise dispose of, on such terms as the Board of Selectmen deems appropriate," the land and building located at 24 South Main St... generally known as the Independence Building.

The building housed the town's first police station and last served as a teen center.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce has expressed interest in the building, which it would like to see restored. Restrooms with handicap-accessibility would be put on the first floor, which Dean Rizzo of the chamber said would make shopping in the village more comfortable for residents and visitors.

Drug tip hotline

Police urge residents to call 383-9406 with tips on any illicit drug activity in town.

in terms of revenue that it could bring in, but that voters would be ultimately deciding on whether they wanted the town to maintain its character or gain more commercial development instead.

During a slide presentation in which he defended his request, Staszko went over Stop & Shop's history in Cohasset since the 1950s, as well as the 40-year lease the store holds with 30 years left on it that he would extend for another 20 years if expansion is allowed.

Staszko said that Stop & Shop has been a "good corporate partner to Cohasset," contributing to the high school's language lab, the South Shore Collaborative and Special Olympics.

He maintained that the proposed 32,000 square foot retail store would keep shopper's money in the community. He also said that the new building would not have a visual impact, except from 3A.

Staszko argued that Shaw's developer requested and was granted approval to move its 400 ft.-by-750 ft. plaza back 250 feet.

"I'm not asking for a special privilege, but for what Shaw's got," he said.

Staszko disputed planning board member Robert Sturdy's complaints about 3A traffic.

"Yes, there is a traffic problem on 3A, but 25,000 of the cars passing through enter the plaza," he said.

The capital budget committee unanimously supported the zoning change, as did the advisory committee, the board of selectmen and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

"We only have 7 percent of our revenue from businesses and 93 percent is on the residents," said selectman Merle Brown. "Al Moore said that we are for commercialization of the town, but we feel it's a limited addition and we think it's prudent to do it."

James Lagrotteria, 104 Howe Rd., an owner of the Shoe Market at the plaza, also spoke in favor of the expansion.

"Zoning bylaws shouldn't be trifled with, but when they were adopted 30 years ago, our home assessments and our taxes were much different," he said. "The only land we can develop in Cohasset is our commercial zones. I'm not in favor of changing the zoning bylaws, but maybe we placed the plaza 200 feet short of where it should have been."

Also in favor was the Cohasset Education Foundation, a private group that supports the schools.

"We support this for economic, aesthetic and humanitarian reasons," said representative Michael Hurley. "Economically, it won't compete with the downtown area but will help with our taxes; aesthetically, it's attractive and set back from the road; and we welcome the humanitarian aid that Stop & Shop, Dunkin' Donuts, Papa Gino's and other businesses in the plaza have given to the town. Staszko has been a good landlord, is a resident and he's been instrumental in bringing the Hingham Institution of Savings to the town."

But Dr. Neal Glick, chairman of the growth and development committee, 7 Spring St., agreed with the planning board.

"It's about planning and not just economics," he said. "Nobody likes to pay taxes, but we have to consider how we want the town to look. I went to a visioning session in Hingham, and when people there were asked to stand up and say what they liked most about their town, no one said, 'What I like most is that lovely stretch on between the police station and Weymouth, where you see strip mall after strip mall after strip mall on 3A.'"

Sturdy, who was on the planning board when the plaza was developed originally, said that the well-run plaza took some wrangling to achieve.

"What you see now is the result of town litigation to get that final result and it was not an easy task," he said. "In the course of these years, there have been a number of zoning violations. Also, Stop & Shop started here as a family business and it has since changed hands three times. There are other possible liabilities involved. The septic system at Stop & Shop has already failed and with Title V changes it will require greater treatment and that does not come at no cost."

Sturdy pointed out that 3A is already operating at maximum capacity and that there is nothing on the drawing board currently that will better that situation.

"What you have before you tonight is spot zoning," he concluded. "The proper place for this, as it was for Shaw's, is to go before the zoning board of appeals which has the power to grant a variance with conditions."

Conservation commission member Michael Dick said that the town had a choice of going forward and becoming a suburban bedroom community with no character but strip malls on 3A, or it could come up with creative solutions that encourage commercial development.

"I'd hope we can take a long view that would allow Mr. Staszko to develop without a 200 foot addition," he said. "It seemed to me that the 200 extra feet is needed for parking, due to zoning bylaws, which say you have to have so many parking spaces per square foot. He shouldn't have to walk away from this meeting with the sense that the town screwed him out of 200 feet to develop his land."

Aside from ironing out which direction the shop should face (toward 3A or into the plaza) and what its design should be, the past litigation Sturdy had referred to involved how much "green" that town bylaws require commercial properties to maintain.

"If you have a 10-acre parcel, you have to leave four acres of green, or something like that," explained planning board chairman Al Moore in a telephone interview yesterday. "There is even a stipulation in the bylaw that you can't count ponds or wetlands as your green. In any event, Staszko owns land there that is residentially zoned and he wanted to use that as open space. The board didn't agree with that, but a judge did."

Staszko said yesterday that the judge involved in the litigation felt that the planning board's demands were excessive and were not negotiated in good faith.

Staszko said that his relationship with Jane Cook, an abutter who swapped property with him which would allow room for the plaza's lot, goes back to the 1970s.

"I went through a site plan approval process in September of 1992 with Mrs. Cook, her family and her lawyers," said Staszko. "My wife and I have been friends with the family for 30 years."

Staszko is stymied at this time so far as future plans for Cohasset Plaza go.

"There is nothing I can do," he said. "I can't go forward at this time. At some point when the citizens of this community think that taking 200 feet of land to generate an extra $90,000 in revenue is appropriate in what's already a highway business zone, I'll go back to the town again."

ART IN BLOOM '99

Our own Patricia Michaud and Barbara Power of the Cohasset Garden Club attended an orientation meeting March 3 at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, to plan for Art in Bloom '99, a festival of flowers and art which takes place at the Museum April 27-29. To celebrate flower design as an art form, arrangements by 72 New England garden clubs will interpret masterpieces throughout the museum's world famous collections. Art in Bloom '99 opens April 26 with a Gala Opening Benefit.

Daily events include guided tours of the arrangements, informal flower arranging demonstrations, illustrated lectures, luncheons with fashion shows, a garden cart shop, and afternoon tea with music. You won't want to miss this! For information and reservations, call (617) 369-3395.

JUST A FACT!

Trust me, this is not a lecture; just a fact! Do all of us take for granted the South Shore Art Center, or just most of us? Well, we're here to tell you ...

From the very young to the eldest, there is something for you! From Chinese brush painting to life drawing to clay work for all levels; to the "Joy of Writing," to mosaics, to landscapes — all of these mediums can be learned by us, through them, at the South Shore Art Center. Their courses and workshops are about to begin again, they run from April through June for this semester — wonderful fun for you or your special kiddo or both of you together!

There are such special days all of the time . . . such as Caribbean Day complete with a trio and Gian Carlo, films and workshops — unbelievable!

There is even an April vacation art camp, with a Caribbean theme, which will allow the children to enjoy the culture in daily activities and performances. A true experience and such fun!

We have only touched the surface of those courses, galas, workshops and exhibitions — please give the center a call for more information — 383-2787. The place is wonderful, the people in charge are even better and their whole program is the best! Need we say more?

TOM WILL BE MISSED

Speaking of the Art Center, it certainly was a place for reflection and memories last Saturday — there was a memorial service for Tom Lucas; artist, teacher, friend, father and grandfather. Most "Cohassetites" remember Mr. Lucas — if you had any talent at all, he knew where to pull it from! He let you be free, but made you think. He offered comments, not criticism; he tried very hard to be sure you found your forte in the art world. His own paintings always reflected him — one could be an award-winning picture of a plant, the next could be a nude — whatever he did, he did with zest and the love of living. He was a special man, one who will be missed, one who cannot easily be replaced. We, your friends and students, will miss you, Tom!

HOUSE SWAP

The Muir Family (who recently returned to Edinburgh, Scotland, after living in Cohasset for two years) are looking for a house/in-law suite to rent between mid-July and mid-August in Cohasset or North Scituate. They will also consider a house swap. Please help! They are desperate, as they have promised their children, Katie and Alexander, they will come "home" for the summer! You may contact them by phone: 011 44 131 337 2082 or E-mail: alelmuir@aol.com.

HEADING TO HOFSTRA

Adam Sasso is one proud person — he recently received acceptance to Hofstra in New York, a great College that will certainly help him to show both his scholastic and athletic abilities to their best! He will also be right near some of his relatives, so that will make everyone happy! We wish you the best, Adam, and know we will keep hearing about you in the future!

Patricia Michaud and Barbara Power pose by an arrangement by the Cohasset Garden Club at the orientation meeting for Art in Bloom '99.

DEAN'S LIST AT BU

We certainly have to congratulate Amie Theriault, a third-year student in a program majoring in physical therapy. Amie made the Boston University dean's list, a very tough thing to do! She did it and we will continue to applaud her forever — right, Amie?!

HONOR SOCIETY

Jen Cellucci was recently inducted into Alpha Mu Gamma, the French National Honor Society. Jen is a sophomore at Fairfield University, majoring in business and French.

An adorable Easter Bunny cake!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Hippity-Hoppity, here comes the Easter Bunny — cake that is! What is there about an adorable bunny cake that everyone loves? Well, if you think back, you must be able to remember at least one special one that your Mom or grandmother made for you! And, if you were really lucky, you got to help!

Here is a recipe for a "Peter Rabbit Cake." No bunny will be able to say no to a slice of this adorable dessert. Baked and decorated ahead of time, the coconut-topped cake makes an eye-catching fitting finale to any Easter feast!

PETER RABBIT CAKE

1 package white cake mix (18-1/4 ozs)
1 can white frosting (16 ozs)
1-3/4 cups flaked coconut, divided
2 drops red food coloring
2 drops green food coloring
Assorted jelly beans
1 stick black licorice, cut lengthwise into 1/8-inch strips

Mix and bake cake according to package directions, using two greased and floured 9-in baking pans. Cool for 10 minutes; remove from pans to wire racks to cool. For bunny's head place one cake on a 20-in x 14-in. covered board. Cut remaining cake into two ears and one bow tie (see diagram). Place ears 4 inches apart on top of head Place bow tie, so it fits in curve of head. Frost top and sides of head, ears and bow tie. Sprinkle 1-1/4 cups coconut over head and ears. Divide remaining coconut between two resealable plastic bags; add red food coloring to one bag and green to the other. Seal bags and shake to coat. Place pink coconut on ears to within 1/2 inch of edges. Place green coconut around outside of the cake. Use jelly beans for eyes, nose and to decorate the bow tie. Cut the licorice into seven 2-inch pieces and seven 3/4-inch pieces. Place six 2-inch pieces next to the nose for whiskers. Bend the remaining 2-inch piece into a semicircle and place 3/4 inch below nose for mouth. Connect nose to mouth with one 3/4-inch piece. Place three 3/4-inch. pieces above each eye for eyelashes

Have fun, both making and eating, this bunny!

Happy Easter!

Community Garden Club news

New members

The new members tea for the Community Garden Club of Cohasset was held at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage March 9. The president, Pam Pelletier, board members and sponsors welcomed Sandra Halverson, Joan Carlo, Isabel Kelley, Jackie Stanley, Judy Dickstein and Bette Kelly as new members. On March 23 at the general meeting the news members were introduced to all and presented with a single rose.

Ikebana workshop

Back by popular demand the Community Garden Club of Cohasset announces that Fran O'-Toole will once again give "Ikebana" flower arranging workshops. These workshops will be held at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the following dates: Wednesday, April 7, and Wednesday, May 6.

Those interested in attending should call Barbara Christensen.

Support the post-prom party

For the second year, a group of parents of senior students at Cohasset High School are planning a Post-Prom All Night Party. The first after Prom All Night Party last year was a huge success, and due to the generosity of many of Cohasset's businesses, they were able to keep the students safe. Supported by local police and organizations, this all night affair gives the students the chance to enjoy a safe and fun experience. The second Post-Prom All Night Party will be held at Cohasset High School after Prom Friday, June 4.

They would be so grateful if your business would make a donation to help make this evening a success again this year.

If you can help out, please make your company's check out to "Cohasset Post-Prom Party" and mail to: Cohasset Post-Prom Party Committee, 51 Forest Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

We wish the following extremely special people a happy birthday — Mary Ahearn, Margaret Casey, John Coe, Jeff Steele, Shirley Kehoe, Earl McArthur and Roger Plante. Hope, all you folks have a day as special as you are!

FLORAL DESIGNS

Finally, if you want to "spring into spring," spring into your floral designs — at the South Shore Art Center. This is put on by Anne Elwell, a NCSGC Flower Show judge, partner of Garden Interiors in Hingham and member of the Cohasset Garden Club. This will take place at 10 a.m. April 6, call the Art Center for tickets (Anne is known throughout the South Shore for her artistic arrangements, and her knowledge of flowers is superior.

OPINION

Of church and state

Town meeting in Cohasset is something to behold. Few other places we know of would spend the bulk of time on a Saturday afternoon debating the First Amendment. The discussion no doubt pushed town meeting into a second session on Monday evening. The remaining 100 or so registered voters on Saturday saw the chance for the first, single session town meeting in more than seven years evaporate slowly as Constitutional concerns wore on into the afternoon.

But that being said, the talk was as American as it gets. We've often said that town meeting is not only democracy in action but also a civics lesson. And nothing goes to the heart of the matter like the separation of church and state.

As Neil Glick of Spring Street pointed out, that "is embedded in our Constitution."

It all started when selectmen refused to waive the building permit fee for the St. Anthony's parish center project last fall.

What selectmen attempted to accomplish at the time was to continue with a nine-year-old policy that seemed fair: no waivers for anyone.

But St. Anthony's was the first church to conduct a major building project since the policy was enacted. The church felt the policy was discriminatory because other churches were granted waivers in the past. So the parishioners decided to ask town meeting for their money back.

Interestingly, in the weeks before town meeting town counsel Paul DeRensis discovered the town had never adopted the state statute allowing selectmen to set fees or a subsequent by-law to set it in motion. So selectmen proposed a two-fold article that would allow them to set fees and give them the discretion on when to waive them.

What ensued was lengthy debate over verbiage that would let selectmen waive fees. No combination of "non-profit, religious, public or charitable entity" seemed to prevent what some feared: non-profits with a hefty till would also be eligible for waivers.

Deleting the words non-profit from the suggested by-law was even proposed.

"If any word should be deleted for legal reasons, it's the word religious," Attorney DeRensis warned.

"For the by-law to waive fees for all religious institutions to pass constitutional muster, it must show that all comparable institutions are treated all the same," he said.

In the end, town meeting struck down the part of the article that would have given the power to waive fees to selectmen.

But town meeting did agree to refund the $14,000 building permit fee to St. Anthony's. Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery's wise advise that we all should support the institutions we belong to and that no fees should be waived did not garner enough support.

So as it stands now, if a church wants its building fee reimbursed it must take the matter to town meeting. And if town meeting says okay, then all non-profits that paid building permit fees in that fiscal year would also get a refund — that could include places like the arts center, Music Circus, community center, yacht club, golf club and so on.

You can bet the selectmen wish they'd just waived the St. Anthony's building permit fee last fall when they had the chance.

Easter egg hunt

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Commission held its 23rd annual Easter Egg Hunt Saturday, March 20, and would like to thank the following organizations and individuals who made it possible: for their continued financial support, we thank the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Cohasset Police Association, Rotary Club of Cohasset, George H. Mealy — American Legion Post, Stephen Wigmore, Cdr. and the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #9146 of Cohasset, Ralph Peroncello, Cdr.

For logistical support gratitude is extended to the DPW, Tree and Park crew, Peter Laugelle, Cohasset Fire Department, Chief Roger Lincoln, Cohasset Police Department, Chief Brian Noonan, Deer Hill School, and Paul Callahan, principal.

For donations, thanks go to Shaw's Supermarket of Cohasset, Mary Mahoney at Mary Lou's Coffee Shops, Mr. Richard P. Barrow, Chairman, Recreation Commission, the Sunrise Assisted Living Center, CVS Stores, Cohasset, Frito-Lay Corporation and the Strawberry Parfait.

For their hard work conducting the Easter Egg Hunt, our most sincere gratitude go to: Ted Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Carbone, Joey Christino, Sara Deveney, Jen Meehan, Jessica Niessink, Eric Worley and members of the Cohasset Youth Resources Committee.

A very special thanks to Rose Collins and Shirley Tewksbury. For their continued efforts, interest and support of this event, sincere gratitude go to Jean and Manny Salvador.

McElroy distorts the facts

TO THE EDITOR:

Since Mr. McElroy has decided to use the Mariner as a forum for his views on the Cohasset school system, I look for his articles first every Thursday. I disagree with many of his points and quite frankly don't understand why special education deserves a second editorial by him. However, since he sees fit to distort facts I feel compelled to ask him: Do children with special needs belong in the Cohasset school system? It seems to me he believes they don't. Secondly I would ask him: Are you accusing the South Shore Collaborative of inflated tuitions? In fact the board of directors is made up of school superintendents from districts using the service that school provides. Are they about to inflate the tuition and spike the cost back to their own school districts? These people are accountable to taxpayers.

You also claim that the 15 groups you mentioned were overruled by special education advocates. Wrong again. Last year Rep. Harkins introduced a bill to change special ed. All the groups agreed on all the changes and verbiage, except for two items: the Federal Standard and Second Opinions. All agreed that a study on the Federal Standard versus Mass. Standard needed to be further studied. Republican state Sen. Brian Lees, who helped chair that committee, stated this standard is so important that he could not make a good conscious decision to approve that change. So what happened — nothing! The bill died in committee and was never brought forward again. The bill was ousted by the House Speaker not advocates.

Funding is the issue for education and facilities. Property taxes cannot cover these costs alone anymore. The federal government and state need to help now.

One more point I would like to comment on and that is the verbiage of special ed. vs. regular ed. Inclusion is reg. ed. with assistance for some not all who have special needs. Teacher training aids and proper funding are solutions to the problem, not pitting parent against parent with vicious undertones. Why don't you just come to the reality that children and schools need help instead of singling out some of our most needy students. Or maybe you just don't feel they belong.

Measuring success in Cohasset schools

Part VIII: Self-Evaluation

THE WAY I SEE IT

JOE MCELROY

I want to thank the Mariner for giving me the opportunity to share my views on how to realize "continuous improvement" in the Cohasset School District. The town should be proud of its schools, but Cohasset is not immune from the need for improvement. The pace of change in the "real world" is frantic. We must set the example in preparing our youth for a highly competitive business world. Planning and executing change is difficult. However, it can be done as evidenced by the middle-high school success in concurrently implementing the middle school concept and block scheduling. Unfortunately, such progress is too often the exception. It requires strong and skillful leadership such as exhibited by Principal Curt Collins and his key staff.

"Patience is a virtue," so I encourage you to adopt that perspective and support the Town/School Operational Override request. At the same time, I would like to close this eight-part series with a self-evaluation document that should be completed 12 months from now. More than 50 percent of the goals are extracts from the Cohasset School Committee's objectives for the current school year. If the school committee and superintendent get a passing grade next year, we should be supportive as they confront the inevitability of additional overrides. If they do not "set the example," the options already exist (school choice, regionalization, private, parochial, charter, university, magnet schools, etc.) to offer parents and taxpayers alternatives in this competitive world.

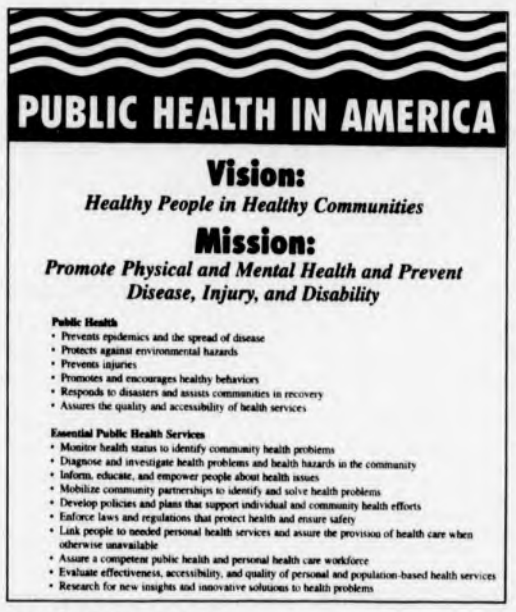
HEALTH NOTES

On-site wastewater management plan

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

On Monday night, March 29, the voters had an opportunity to learn about the features contained in the Town's wastewater management plan. A warrant article (No.24), was approved, which enables the town to borrow $200,000 from the State to repair and upgrade septic systems in town in accordance with a priority established by a plan proposed by the Board of Health. The only part of the plan which requires approval by the town are the loan provisions, although, the Board of Health plans to solicit comments from the town on all elements of the plan.

- The loan program passed by the town calls for the following provisions:
- Plan should be approved by the DEP
- Does not require participation in any wastewater management program
- $20K maximum loan to any homeowner
- No greater than 0.75% interest, over a 20-year betterment loan
- Priority given to property owners who have the most need from a public health standpoint.



The Wastewater Management Plan is still undergoing revision, however, its major provisions will remain:

- State funded loansfor Title V repairs
- A Voluntary Septic System Management Program
- Credits to induce the use of perkable land for wastewater treatment

When the Board of Health has a revised plan, it will be brought to the town for approval.

1999 Public Health Week

This year, Public Health Week is April 5 through 11. Public Health week focuses on a great variety of issues from pollution prevention to smoking reduction to use of seat belts, clean drinking water, food safety, vaccination programs and a host of others. There will be much written about health issues in the media. Take a look at your own health concerns and see if there's an opportunity to adopt a more healthy lifestyle.

Stamps take note of Bill & Monica

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Next time you get a letter from your cousin in Abkhazia, take a good look at the stamp.

It may feature Monica Lewinsky cuddling with her erstwhile main squeeze, the one who lives in subsidized housing at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

What? You've never heard of Abkhazia. If it will make you feel better, neither have I until this week.

The stamps, we are assured, were issued by Abkhazanians "who are seeking recognition and funding for their state in a remote area of Georgia."

Abkhazia has issued this set of six stamps showing our Bill, resplendent in an unbuttoned shirt, white skivvies imprinted with hearts, and sandals, clutching a cocktail in one hand and Monica in the other.

(No, former House Speaker Newt Gingrich isn't leading a rebellion in the Deep South. This is the former Soviet republic of Georgia.)

Anyway, Abkhazia has issued this set of six stamps showing our Bill, resplendent in an unbuttoned shirt, white skivvies imprinted with hearts, and sandals, clutching a cocktail in one hand and Monica in the other.

Monica is wearing a big smile, a demure dress (it may be blue, but I haven't seen the color version yet) and the kind of shoes Judy wore in "The Wizard of Oz."

The six stamps range in postage from 100 to 400 AIjCHbIs, whatever the hell they are.

If you can't make it to a post office in downtown Abkhazia, the stamps are available for $9.95 (plus $3 postage and handling) from the International Collectors Society at 3600 Crondall Lane, Owings Mills, Md.

And they're going like hotcakes.

"We have a flood of interest from people who either love or hate the whole Clinton-Lewinsky scandal, but they want to have this issue," said John Van Emden, the president of the ICS. "Our phones are ringing off the hook."

But no calls are coming from Abkhazia (if there is such a place) and the stamps themselves probably have never been closer to home than a printing press in the basement at 3600 Crondall Lane.

Of course, the stamps can't be used for postage in the United States or any other country in the world, except for a few remote acres of Georgia that are controlled by Abkhazian partisans, who are said to have "issued" the stamps.

And, besides, the International Collectors Society has them copyrighted.

"All this controversy seems only to have made the issue more popular and the stamps are more difficult to find," says the president of the ICS. "In fact, we're nearly sold out."

Maybe they'll have to print some more.

It will come as no surprise to veteran stamp collectors that this has been going on for some time.

The European nation of Lichtenstein (in the Alps next to Austria) was said to have once balanced its annual budget by the sale of stamps to collectors, chiefly Americans.

Just about every country of this world — and some not of it — commemorated the death of Princess Diana with a stamp sold mostly to collectors.

But what is tropical Tanzania doing issuing stamps honoring Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer?

Or the Central African Republique de Niger with a Frank Sinatra stamp?

And there's also that Three Stooges stamp from Mongolia.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen:
Keeping up with school building maintenance has been a challenge for the school department prompting some to say the town should take it over under an expanded department of public works. Would you support the town taking over the maintenance of school buildings along with that portion of the school budget?

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

The maintenance of town facilities must be a priority. When the taxpayers spend so much money on capital projects, they have a right to expect that these facilities will be properly maintained.

The school department does an excellent job of educating our children. Keeping the buildings clean and well maintained isn't necessarily a corollary function, but it is an important one. The taxpayers expect it and the children deserve it. Learning should be taking place in an environment that is clean, healthy and pleasant, and one where the heat and the bathrooms function. Parents and students should be able to take pride in these buildings, and students should play a role in taking care of them as well.

Maintenance of the school's physical plant should be accomplished as efficiently and as cost effectively as possible. The DPW's maintenance division is best equipped to handle that responsibility. This issue has been, and will continue to be, a personal priority. I will continue to cooperate with the superintendent and the school committee on how to best achieve the mutual goal of well-maintained school facilities.

SELECTMAN/ Fred Koed

The consolidation of maintenance of all town property under the new DPW is an idea that needs further analysis. In my experience in town government, now having served on three different boards, I don't believe that the town itself has an outstanding record of scheduling maintenance.

The recent facilities report said that the high school "for a 41 year old building is in good condition and has served the town well." Certain parts of these buildings do not meet today's higher standards. For instance the old style windows at the Deer Hill School, while meeting yesterday's standards when installed, no longer meet today's high thermal standards.

The current DPW has been given responsibility for mantaining town buildings such as the Police/Fire Headquarters, town hall, and the new DPW garage. I would take the incremental approach. The DPW will need time to create the expertise needed to learn these new operations. Let's see how that goes. If it goes smoothly, then by all means, let's consider further consolidation. But ultimately it should be a decision the School Committee is comfortable with.

Remember — most major repair work is bid out on a contractual basis. The town itself is not large enough to justify a full time painting and construction crew, especially in many diverse trades. So functionally, this consolidation will consist of preparing bidding documents and overseeing the contractors performance. Where possible, we should perform maintenance in house. But the reality is that most of this work will still be contracted out.

SELECTMAN/ Nan Roth

School maintenance has become a serious problem in Cohasset. In fact, the condition of both the Deer Hill School and the middle/high school is deplorable. A consistent maintenance plan has not been implemented, and funds for maintenance have sometimes been diverted to support academic programs when finances have been tight.

At Town Meeting last Saturday, a building maintenance division was formed within the department of public works. This division will be responsible for planning and carrying out maintenance projects in the town hall, library, fire and police station, and in the DPW building to keep these buildings in good condition.

During this year I support continued negotiations between the school department, the DPW superintendent and the town manager to plan for the inclusion of school maintenance within the DPW. Once legal, financial and procedural issues are ironed out, the DPW should develop a long term maintenance plan for all school buildings in conjunction with renovation work completed by outside contractors.

The DPW maintenance division will have responsibility for the upkeep of buildings. Accountability will be direct. The town manager will supervise the DPW to ensure that plans are created, and projects budgeted, scheduled and carried out as needed.

This year we have a new elementary school and we are planning major repairs to Deer Hill and the middle/high school. Our upgraded buildings must be kept in top shape to prolong their value, to provide the best learning environment for our children and to demonstrate that Cohasset cares about the quality of life in our community.

Board of Health:
How do you feel about smoking in the town's restaurants?

HEALTH BOARD/ Charles H. Sturdy

The regulation of smoking has become a major issue for many communities across the country in recent years. This issue has been brought to the forefront in part by the growing recognition that smoking represents a health hazard both to smokers and non-smokers alike. In essence, the health hazard presented by smoking is very much like the health hazard presented by improperly handled wastewater. Tobacco smoke presents a health hazard not only to the smoker, but also those who are in close proximity to the smoker just as uncontained wastewater represents a health hazard not only to the residents of the property from which it emanates, but also to the abutters.

In general, I support the right of people to smoke. I do not believe, however, that it is appropriate to permit smoking inside restaurants and other public facilities. There is ample evidence today regarding the negative health risks associated with second hand smoke. Restaurant patrons and employees should not be subjected to these risks in order to accommodate the desire of others to smoke in public places. Moreover, ameliorative measures such as separate seating areas do not adequately address the problem given the widespread use of air recirculation systems in most restaurants. In Cohasset, the inadequacy of this solution is further compounded by the small size of many of the local eating establishments. In this regard, I do not support the Board of Health's decision to permit smoking in the new restaurant opening at the former Chart House site.

HEALTH BOARD/ Robin Lawrence

Smoking inside a public access location is a classic case study of individual rights v. the good of society. While I do not condone abridging the rights of individuals, this is clearly a situation in which society's interests are paramount.

The evidence, starting with the landmark 1964 Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health and continuing to the present, is compelling: smoking tobacco products is addictive; smoking tobacco products is a primary causal factor of lung cancer and, to a lesser extent, of stroke and cardiovascular disease; second-hand smoke has been associated with increased morbidity and mortality, placing employees and other customers inside a public access location at unnecessary risk. Simply put, smoking kills.

Collectively, we have an obligation to reduce tobacco use in current smokers and prevent others, especially adolescents, from initiating this dangerous addictive habit. A thoughtful combination of education, role-modeling, and governmental intercession is appropriate to fight the "tobacco war." I am unequivocally in favor of banning tobacco smoking in public access locations, including the restaurants of Cohasset.

School Committee:
Keeping up with school building maintenance has been a challenge for the school department prompting some to say the town should take it over under an expanded department of public works. Would you support the town taking over the maintenance of school buildings along with that portion of the school budget?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Betsy Connolly

Keeping up with school building maintenance has been a challenge for the school department. There is one maintenance worker for all three buildings. His responsibilities include; keeping up with daily maintenance needs, completing emergency repairs and undertaking long term projects to mask the malfunctions of two aged buildings. School administrators spend too much time with these types of problems rather than being able to lead in the area of their expertise, education.

At this time, I understand that the town manager and members of the board of selectmen have met with the superintendent to discuss the feasibility of consolidating maintenance services and possibly hiring a manager to oversee all town and school facilities. In theory this is an wonderful idea. School administrators should not have to spend an inordinate amount of time on issues related to maintaining buildings. In many surrounding towns, there are such department heads. Some manage buildings for the entire town, others just the school structures.

The negative to this plan is that the manager needs to have a team of workers to supervise. If we included an additional maintenance worker for the schools, it could be a very effective way of keeping the Osgood fine tuned, assisting in renovation plans for the Deerhill and Middle/High School and accomplishing repair projects that seem endless.

I hope that the town manager, superintendent, school committee and selectman will continue to explore providing a more efficient and effective maintenance plan for the town.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Stephanie Noble

The initiative for the creation of the Building Maintenance Division (BMD) within the DPW, coupled with the benign neglect of our schools' physical plant(s) would beg the question: Is it time to transfer the responsibility of our schools' maintenance from the school committee and superintendent to the new BMD?

Shifting the responsibility from the school committee/superintendent to the BMD (should this initiative pass) would keep the dollars needed for the schools' maintenance out of the school budget and therefore not subject to any cuts should the schools' operating costs exceed budget.

The track record for providing for the maintenance of our schools under the leadership of the school committee and superintendent has not been a stellar one. However I hesitate to endorse this proposal wholeheartedly until the new school committee and Dr. Malvey have the opportunity to either prove that the past performance of prior superintendent(s) and school committees is not indicative of Dr. Malvey's and the new school committee's future performance in regard to school maintenance or to decide to relinquish this responsibility to the new BMD. Relinquishing responsibility would certainly make the BMD's job a more daunting one but it might also help to alleviate the pervasive mistrust surrounding the management of the schools' operating budget.

Candidate profiles next week

This was the last week for Question of the Week. Watch for candidate profiles and an election preview in next week's Cohasset Mariner.

Election '99

Absentee ballots are available

Absentee ballots for the annual town election on April 10 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, April 9, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 10 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system is used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice, follow directions as to the number of candidates for each office, and to vote for a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, write the candidate's name on the line and completely fill in the OVAL. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables.

The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

the one at Stop & Shop, are sprawling asphalt wastelands that remove grass and trees forever. Nothing could be further from the truth, Moore said.

"We have been criticized for requiring a lot of parking, but people haven't really thought it through all the way," Moore said. "If you look at Stop & Shop, you'll see a greenbelt around the parking lot. They didn't put that there because they're nice guys. They did it because we stood our ground and told them to build a green-space to serve as a source of future parking if necessary. Our goal aesthetically is to try and get away from that solid asphalt, paved look like you can see on Route 1 in Saugus."

The town's bylaws require office buildings and retail establishments to provide one parking space for every 100 square feet of net floor area. The bylaws also require developers to provide adequate aisle space and appropriate parking space configuration to ensure that cars can get in and out of the lot with little trouble. In many cases, the planning board allows developers to pave a smaller parking area only if the rest of the parking lot is turned into a green space that is reserved for future parking needs. The bylaw allows the planning board to set aside up to one-third of the parking area as a green-space for future use. At any time, the planning board can require a developer to pave the green area if additional parking is required.

"Through our bylaws, we've provided protection for the future."

— Al Moore, planning board chairman

"If you look at many of our developments that were built in the 1950s, you can see that they do not address our parking needs in the 1990s," Moore said. "Just because you have a certain use now doesn't mean it will remain that way forever. Look at Tedeschi's Plaza. Woolworth's and Stop & Shop are gone. They have been replaced by new stores, each with their own unique parking needs."

Moore said the planning board always considers the needs of each applicant. A liquor store needs less parking than a supermarket because people tend to buy their alcohol quickly and leave. Supermarket shoppers may stay for an hour or more.

Another goal of the parking regulations is to promote adequate traffic flow on roads by making sure cars don't queue up on the street waiting to enter a lot. Moore said the Stop & Shop lot is designed so commuters can go right, left or straight quickly upon entering the driveway. The bylaws also require wider spaces than most other towns. The town's parking bylaws work to prevent traffic backups, especially on busy roads like Route 3A.

"Through our bylaws, we've provided protection for the future," Moore said. "We have to worry about what's going to happen 50 years from now when we're all long gone. What kind of legacy are we going to leave for future generations? I think we've provided for future space needs and we have grass and trees growing now. The bylaws work well, and we're proud of them."

Of course, what seems to work well in theory doesn't always work out in fact. Building Inspector Robert Egan is in a position to comment on the effectiveness of the parking regulations as the town's zoning enforcement officer. He said he has not observed any parking problems in new retail developments.

"I've never seen a parking problem, even on the busiest day of the year," Egan said. "On the day before Thanksgiving, you may have to park at the farthest edge of the lot at a supermarket, but you'll get a spot. If the goal is to provide a space for everyone that wants to get into a store, then I guess we've accomplished that goal."

Road race support appreciated

The Board of Selectmen
c/o Mr. Mark Haddad, Town Manager
Dear Mr. Haddad:

The Cohasset Rotary Club wishes to extend its thanks to the Town of Cohasset for their excellent support of today's 23rd annual Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea. In particular we'd like to single out the support of Harold Litchfield and the DPW crew whose behind the scenes work make the race course safe and clean after the throes of winter; the Police department were very supportive, and in particular the very proactive help town's new Animal Control Officer.

Although I am told this was the worse weather we have experienced in our 23 years, the runners very much enjoyed our town and its beautiful scenery. For your general information, we had about 660 runners and about 50 very brave walkers. Of special interest were the 75 volunteers from our community who turned out to assist our very small Rotary Club to make this event the success it was.

These volunteers included the Appalachian Service Project and the Youth Resources as well as other local individual volunteers who gave up several hours of their time to brave the elements. Without this outpouring of town support we could not have offered the runners the quality of run they enjoyed.

Consignment shop to reopen April 15

Monday, April 5, Cohasset Consignment Shop at Tedeschi Plaza on Rte. 3A will open at 10 a.m. for astute shoppers and consignments of spring and summer clothing for children, women, men, and infants.

Formerly the location of the Woolworths, manager Andi Merrill noted that the new quarters will have 3,700 square feet of much needed space and will be able to offer a wider selection of antiques, silver, china, art, unique jewelry, more bric-a-brac as well as a greater assortment of designer attire for men and women. There will be a larger variety of children's clothing including traditional blue blazers and suits for all ages.

Consigning hours will be Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and the store will be open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

For over four decades, the proceeds have supported the countless worthy support programs of the Social Service League founded in 1912 to assist towns of Hull, Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset. The shop is run entirely by a group of 120 volunteers and more are always needed. To volunteer or to seek information, contact Andi Merrill at 383-0687.

LIBRARY CORNER

Paperback writers

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library now has two spinner racks of paperbacks in the adult reading room. One is full of light popular books and the other is stocked with classics like "Middlemarch," by George Eliot and "Great Expectations," by Charles Dickens.

"Year-end circulation figures will give us a measure of popularity," says library director Janet Husband. "Some readers have a clear preference for paperbacks over hardcovers, because they are so light and easy to carry."

They are great for vacation trips and just a quick book to read. Come in to the library and see which you prefer.

New investment service at library

"Value Line Investment Survey Expanded Edition" is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This service reports on 1,800 additional stocks, beyond the 1,700 stocks covered in the basic Value Line Investment Survey, also available at the library. These two services publish each week, giving summaries, ratings and various "screens" on a group of stocks. These two services are paid for by the Mercie Vinal Nichols Fund, a library trust fund.

Despite the foul weather, a large pack of runners get off to a quick start in the Cohasset 10k By the Sea.

Gonsalves sprints away from the Race By the Sea field

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

If anyone was going to beat Randolph's Mel Gonsalves in Sunday's 23rd Annual Cohasset Road Race By The Sea, he had to go in with the mindset that there was going to be plenty of hurt, because that's the way Gonsalves approached the hilly 10K course.

"I just wanted to run fast" said Gonsalves, a member of the Boston Athletic Association, "If I got beat, I got beat."

As it turned out, no one in the field of 662 runners was able to come close to Gonsalves. He simply took the lead at the gun and bulled his way through the chilly breeze and spitting rain to a 32-minute, 40-second finish.

"I just wanted to run fast, if I got beat, I got beat."
MEL GONSALVES - MEMBER OF THE BOSTON ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

The win was Gonsalves' second in three years. He won in 1997 and placed second last year.

Sunday's victory rounded out a successful weekend of racing for Gonsalves. He won the 35-39 division of the 3,000 meters in 8:44 at the National Masters Championships, Saturday, at the Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center. That time, equivalent to a 9:20 in the 2 mile, was proof positive that no one in the Cohasset race was going to be able to run away from Gonsalves. However, the opposite was very much true.

"I had a lot of confidence in that race,"Gonsalves said.

He went through the mile in a slowish 5:12 before picking up the pace to pass two miles in 10:12. By that point the race had long been decided but Gonsalves had a punishing wind, the worst of which came along Jerusalem Road to contend with.

Race by the Sea winner Mel Gonsalves cruises a long without a competitor in sight.

"I almost need a swear word to describe it", Gonsalves said of the blustery section along the ocean. "There was wind the whole way. I was actually looking for a hill to get out of it."

The wind though, didn't take away Gonsalves overall enjoyment of the race.

"This isn't the biggest race in the world, but I love it," he said. "It's run really well and the crowd along the course is always great."

Masters winner Bob Chasen of Weymouth was a distant second in 34:26, just ahead of Whitman's Bob Ruel (34:30). Like Gonsalves, women's winner Katherine Merra of Hingham dominated the field. Merra's time of 40:27 was a full 3:15 in front of runner-up Tara Harman of North Scituate. Norwell's Heidi Russell (44:05) was third.

Race director Roy Fitzsimmons was very pleased with how smoothly the race went. He knew the cold and rain would keep the field smaller than the more than 1,000 runners of a year ago.

"The only chink in the armor was the weather," Fitzsimmons said. "With better weather we probably would have doubled that total".

Fitzimmons commended the sponsors, volunteers and the walkers who turned out for the 10K event held earlier in the day beginning at Sandy Beach.

"We went down to the beach and the rain was almost parallel with the road" Fitzsimmons said. Of the volunteers, Fitzsimmons said "We've been touted as a race that tends to details. The volunteers who came out were terrific."

The weather kept many of the walkers away as well. Of the 150 who registered, only 70 braved the miserable conditions and participated.

The time is now for Cohasset's senior-laden squad

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The window of opportunity. It is a phrase commonly associated with professional teams. But it applies just as easily to this year's Cohasset High varsity baseball team. With a corps of seniors who spent their winters priming for the season and a talented handful of underclassmen, the Skippers window of opportunity for fulfilling their potential is closing..

This year's seniors (nine in all) have been talked up, rightfully or wrongfully, as the most talented baseball class to come through in years. As freshmen, several of them were part of a team that qualified for the state tournament, ending a 24-year drought. As sophomores, they limped to the finish line, led by another strong senior class which couldn't seem to put all the pieces together. As juniors, they struggled to do the little things necessary to win, and dropped several close ballgames, finishing at 7-13, three wins shy of a tourney berth.

Now as seniors, they have their last shot at tournament glory. Complemented by five skilled juniors and one talented freshman, they also hope to call up a few sophomore and freshman hopefuls who prove their mettle at the junior varsity level.

The Skipper pitching staff is rich this year, with over 300 innings of varsity experience behind them. Junior righty Joe Pergola, who did not pitch last year due to shoulder problems but who possesses a darting fastball, a sharp curve, and a deceptive change-up, will be Cohasset's ace. Ben Ketchum and Jim O'Sullivan are the other two surefire starters, both right-handed control pitchers. Five-year veteran Greg Taylor has not pitched for Cohasset since his sophomore year, but has shown signs of returning to his previous form this spring. If his progress continues, and his shoulder stays healthy, Taylor will grab a startng role or become the Skippers' closer.

John-Paul Laugelle, Pete Minnar, Greg O'Keefe, and Nick Bolster will all serve as long relievers and eat up innings out of the bullpen.

O'Sullivan will start behind the plate and will be backed by senior Greg Parkinson and freshman Tim Straughn.

Laugelle, after spending seasons on the gridiron and the mat, will be Cohasset's starting first baseman, and will be spelled by senior Ryan Story. Pergola should also see time at first. Pergola will also play at second. Much like last year's Red Sox, the Skippers have a logjam at second. Pergola's classmates Danny Mulligan and Chris Pratt will also fill that role. Freshmen Bolster and Robin Murphy will also get their shots at second. With five able first baseman, coach Bob Knurek will not find his team lacking there.

Set for a break-out year, Al Schwerin is a veritable institution at the hot corner. Senior Jared Ford will relieve him. Taylor has the starting shortstop job under lock, and Pergola will spell him when Taylor takes the hill.

The outfield situation is not unlike the second base dilemma. Bolster and Pratt will split time between second and left. Ketchum will patrol center when he's not pitching. When he does throw, Bolster or sophomore Doug O'Biren will replace him. Right field is full, with Denis Rooney starting and looking to produce at the plate with a powerful bat. Minnar and O'Keefe will both pitch and play right, while Parkinson will see innings there as well.

With one of the most experienced staffs in the league, and a team hungry for postseason play, the Skippers expect big things from themselves this year. They may challenge for the league title and anything less than a strong showing in the tournament would be disappointing this year. The question is, can they play up to their potential and answer the bell when it rings?

Cohasset's season begins today, with a home game against the Hingham Harbormen at 3:30.

RECREATION NEWS

Applications for positions available

The recreation department is accepting applications for Playground Program Counselor positions for their seven week summer program for children ages 3 1/2 to 12. Applicants must be at least 18 years of age with demonstrated experience working with children in camp, sports or organizational environments.

Should you be interested in working with children in day camp structured program, call the Cohasset Recreation Department at (781) 383-4109 for details and application form.

The recreation department is also accepting applications for sports/games program coordinators by calling the office.

Fitness Center hours

The Fitness Center at Cohasset High School will be open to the public for use or registration during the following hours, until 125 members are attained: Starting April 1, Mondays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., Wednesdays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., Thursdays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturdays 8 a.m. to noon.

These hours/days will remain in effect until 125 individuals are registered, at which time the center will be open expanded hours Mondays through Saturdays.

The fee is $15 per month, per person and registration is at the Fitness Center, Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St. Enter the school via the front door located to the right side of the main entrance to CHS.

Equi named Director

The Recreation Commission announces that Martha Equi will again be the director of the Summer Playground Program for children 3 1/2 to 12 years. Registration will be held the week of June 14. Details coming soon.

The Recreation Commission has also established fee charges for the 1999 Playground Program which will remain the same as the 1998 program as follows: 5-12 year olds: $150 for first child ($275 non-residents), 3-5 year olds: $125 for first child. Discounts for second and subsequent children are $25. Activity fees — $45 for first child, second child, and $35 for third and subsequent children. Mandatory, non-refundable activity fee is separate from program fee to be paid at registration, which will cover most special events and a T-shirt. A separate check will be necessary.

Limited enrollment has been set for each program.

Non-residents are taken on a space available basis and there are no discounts available for multiple children.

All children must be toilet trained.

Programs

5-12 year olds, full day programs, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

5-7 year old program — Deer Hill School

8-12 year old program — Deer Hill School

Pre-school 3-5 year old half day program - Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Must be born January 1, 1994 through March 1, 1996 to qualify. Held at New Osgood School.

Open gym boys and girls

The recreation department also announces that the Osgood School gym will be supervised on Wednesday evenings, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. for grades 7-12 boys and girls who wish to play basketball on a pick-up basis or work on skills.

Andy Fitzsimmons and J. L. Williams are volunteering their time, under the direction of Ron Ford, keeping the gym open and available to grades 7-12 students.

The first sessions are each Wednesday evening through June 16. The exclusion to this will be Wednesday, April 21, school vacation week.

There is no charge for this opportunity due to the volunteer efforts of everyone involved. All players must be picked up by 9 p.m. sharp at the Osgood School.

Baseball Clinic

Registrations for an April vacation four day baseball clinic to be conducted by the South Shore Baseball Club are being accepted at Barnes Field North Main St., Cohasset, Wed., April 20, through Fri., April 23 from noon to 3 p.m. Cost is $85 per player for the session.

You may register at the Cohasset Recreation Office, first floor town hall and checks should be made payable to: Town of Cohasset.

Space is limited, hence, early registration is advised. For further information, you may call the office at 383-4109.

Safe Boating Course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary, Flotilla 1208, and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a spring, six session, Safe Boating Course offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults, however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16 year olds and under, who wish to operate a craft powered by 25 horsepower or more. U.S.C.G.A., Flotilla 1208 instructors will teach the six session course, scheduled to begin on Tuesday May 11, at the Cohasset High School. Classes will meet each Tues. and Thurs. Evening from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., May 11, through May 27.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 383-4109, as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on a first call basis. There will be a $25 per person fee for this program that covers the cost of the textbook and class materials.

Checks for payment must be made out to: U.S.C.G.A. Flotilla 1208. While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children aged 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

Certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Family math and science night

Osgood School's annual Family Math and Science Night for Kindergarten and first grade students is happening Thursday, April 8, from 6:30 to 8 p.m. in the Osgood cafeteria. Family Math and Science Night offers innovative, creative ways for parents and children to explore basic math and science concepts using everyday materials found in the home. These "hands-on" activities provide an opportunity for students to develop important problem-solving skills.

Substitute madness

By W. Adam Janes
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The first thing that pops into kids' minds when they hear the word "substitute" is "freedom." Freedom from the discipline of their regular teachers. Freedom from having to stay quiet for 42 minutes straight. Most of all, the freedom to do and say anything. All those things kids think about are reality, but an evil one. When a sub comes into a classroom, they expect to get the respect that other teachers get, and so do the other teachers. That isn't what always happens.

For the past few months in my social studies class, every time a sub comes in, the room becomes a pit of rudeness, yelling, disobedience and unfairness. Who is to blame for this? Most kids would say the teachers are mean and put names down right away for nothing. Most teachers would say kids are totally disrespectful and disobedient when a sub is teaching. Both sides are right. Kids become corrupted with their new-found freedom, which they really don't have and became rowdy and don't listen to anything. The subs sometimes put kids' names on the board for being late and other crazy things. But that's not the half of it.

When the regular teacher gets back, it's pure chaos. The teacher doesn't listen to the kids, but listens to the sub a lot, and so kids get yelled at for nothing. The kids, when asked what happened, lie like rugs about not doing anything and being perfect. Their stories are true and false. A lot of the people might not have done anything, but there are the few kids who use that same remark to get out of deep-!@#$. These are the kids who disrupt the class constantly and are pains. The fact of the matter is, when a sub is around, kids get rowdy, teachers then get mean, and it's everyone's fault, but the kids are really to blame. If they were more obedient and had proper manners, then I would never have had to write this article.

W. Adam Janes is the son of Ingrid Gjesteby Janes, 1979 CHS graduate. Adam is a seventh-grader in Longmeadow, Mass.

Mittens donated to charity

Inspired by "The Mitten Tree," by Candace Christiansen and "What a Wonderful World," by George David Weiss, Osgood pupils set to work! With the help of Anne O'Leary, the school librarian, and Betsy Ogden, the art teacher — first-, second- and third-grade students read both books, hand-stitched fleece mittens and hung them on the school's own "mitten tree."

Kindergartners and their families participated by contributing store-bought mittens. More than 150 pairs were donated to The Charity Guild, Inc., to be distributed to families throughout Boston and the South Shore! This was a wonderful lesson for all involved.

A special thanks to the parents who helped, the PSO and Wal-Mart of Plymouth for its contribution of discounted polar fleece.

Science teacher to retire amid accolades

Franey steps down after 38 years

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

For 38 years, Cohasset high school teacher James Franey has spent early mornings sterilizing beakers, setting up lab stations, checking on the lizards, gerbils and fish whose tanks line his classroom walls and staying late for supervised study. If students have their way, he'll continue.

"A couple of kids talked about starting a petition to force me not to retire," said Franey about students' reaction to the news that he plans to depart at the end of the school year..

Franey said that he's leaving with mixed feelings and is mainly motivated by a desire to spend time with his four grandchildren while they're still young.

"I have all my retirement papers in my briefcase, all filled out, but I haven't been able to hand them in yet," he said. "My years here have been consistently satisfying, but I have four grandchildren and a fifth on the way. Between the pull of the grandchildren and this school, I'm torn."

Students who have not yet benefited from Franey's teaching are clamoring for his classes.

"There are already some students, who were hoping to have him next year," said Cohasset Middle-High School principal Curtis Collins, who has known Franey since 1965. "I've run into several who have found out they won't have him and are disappointed. He's a great teacher and we're going to miss him terribly."

Some of those lucky enough to have had Franey have gone on to pursue work in biology, such as Dan Jones, who went on to become the executive director of the NSRWSA (North South River Watershed Association) and is currently a Cohasset teacher.

Another is Andrew Ross, a first-year student at University of Richmond, Va., who named Franey as an outstanding educator.

Ross wanted to show gratitude to the teacher who inspired him to pursue biology as his intended major. He did so by writing an essay that said, "Mr. Franey's sense of humor and creative energy always kept biology very interesting to me, and he is a big reason why biology is my intended major.

"Since he's retiring this year I just want to thank him for being such a great teacher and good friend," said Ross.

James Franey teaches molecular theory at Cohasset High. The popular science teacher will retire at the end of the school year.

Jean Terrell, public relations coordinator of the University of Richmond, said that the outstanding recognition program began in 1990 to honor educators that have made a difference.

"Generally, the students recommend somebody they had a great rapport with," she said. "First-year students voluntarily submit a recommendation and it gives the students a chance to express where they have been, where they're going and why."

"He made biology fun and interesting for me," said Ross. "He's a great teacher, he prepped me wonderfully for the AP exam and while there are many great teachers at the high school, he's one of the standouts. He's the man."

This is not Franey's first award for his work with students at the school.

In April of 1995, Franey won first prize in the Secretaries' Award for Excellence in Environmental Education in recognition of his marine biology program/Gulf River Project.

The Gulf River Project was part of Franey's marine studies program. It was a joint venture of Cohasset High School, the Cohasset Health Department and the Cohasset Water Department through which student volunteers monitored water quality and biological activity of the Gulf River.

In the fall and spring terms, students studied ecosystems at the sandy and rocky beaches, salt marshes and rivers of Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield and traced the source of the North River through Hanover and Pembroke.

Special needs teacher Florence Ely filled out the application for that award.

"We all think he's special," she said. "He's great with all the kids, no matter what their learning ability is; he makes it work for all of them."

David Magnussen, math and science department chairman, agrees.

"Speaking not only as a department head, but also as an experienced teacher, Mr. Franey is a true treasure," he said. "I think that's not an overstatement in any way. I consider him to be one of the finest teachers in all of New England-not just Massachusetts. He is a very special individual and no one gives him higher reviews than his students, which is always the mark of excellence," Magnussen said.

Franey's ability to translate the sciences into interesting and fun lectures is one of the things Ross remembers best about his instructor.

> "Since he's retiring this year I just want to thank him for being such a great teacher and good friend."
> — Andrew Ross, former student of Franey's.

"He would lighten things up by giving surprise questions on exams," he said. "There was one quiz where every single answer was water. 'What do we drink?' What comes out of the taps? Another time, in the middle of an exam, was the question, 'Who comes down the chimney at Christmas?'"

His methods bring results.

Last year, half of his advanced placement students scored a five (on a scale of one to five) and the other half had fours.

"It was incredible!" said Collins. "But he's done that kind of things with his kids for years. He communicates to everybody and can teach almost any science class in the building. He just commands such respect from both the faculty and the student body and he stands well above his peers in that area. He researches, prepares and gives of his time unstintingly. You always know that Jim Franey is doing a great job - he's a fine man."

If there is anything about Franey that won't be missed, it's the special delivery specimens that arrive at the front desk for him.

"He's always ordering these live specimens," laughed Collins. "The secretaries see these boxes with frogs and things. They call him and say, 'Please, get here. You've got something live in a box!"

Franey originally planned on a career in medicine but after the premed. marathon of courses and a BA from Boston College, he decided that he didn't want seven more years of education.

Other than a three-month stint filling in for a teacher in Groton, Franey has always taught in Cohasset. His friend, Charlie Davis, suggested that they both interview for jobs here. The two were joined by Richard Nash.

"There was a period when three of my Abington High School chums were here," he said.

When not teaching, Franey served as an Abington selectman for nine years and spent his summers in graduate school through a National Science Foundation grant.

"The Foundation would bring together the best instructors to teach high school teachers from about 30 different states," he said about his summers at Drake University in DesMoines, Iowa, Occidental College in Los Angeles and University of Tennessee at Backridge, as well as local schools like U.Mass/Boston and Eastern Nazarene.

Franey's future summers will be spent playing golf and playing with the grandchildren.

"I've enjoyed teaching, but my grandkids are growing up so fast," he said. "The best of my job has been working with the students daily. And there is a rapport that has always existed among the teaching staff.

"Andrew Ross cites me, but they're tremendous people; they really are. This is a wonderful school with the best bunch of kids and teachers. It was an ideal situation."

Fifth high school Belize adventure underway

Students are bound to have egrets

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Howler monkeys, egrets, jaguars, fish, fauna and Mayan ruins are on the agenda for Cohasset High School students going on a field trip to Belize this month.

The adventuresome group of 23 juniors and seniors will participate in a nine-day visit to the South American country's many conservation sites as part of a for-credit academic program led by math and science department chairman David Magnussen and Eastern Nazarene College biology professor J. Philip McLaren, Ph.D.

Magnussen came up with the idea five years ago when he was looking for a way to bring the concept of "hands-on" science to his students.

"When I was hired as the chairman of the science department, part of my vision for science in the '90s was that it should be experiential, with kids given the opportunity to go out and do science," he said. "That's what led me to the field trip idea. This will be my fifth trip."

What Magnussen brings to the mix is an undergraduate background in biology and psychology; extensive work in archaeology in the local area; and traveling experience throughout the United States, South America and Central America. He also served as chairman of the North River chapter of the Massachusetts Archaeological Society in the early 1980s.

"I've had a lifelong experience in these types of things," said Magnussen.

Students have six weeks of instruction at school before going to Belize, where they then attend 45-minute evening lectures which either introduces something new or wraps up some of their work.

"This is not for tourists," emphasized Magnussen. "The students know this right up front. But most of the kids sign up for this a year in advance. I send a lot of literature home to the parents and kids, advertising it as an educational experience so that they'll know what they're signing up for.

"It's an experience that typical suburban kids don't get," he said. "We spend 100 percent of the time outside-the rooms don't even have screens on them. We eat nothing but the local foods; no hamburgers and hot-dogs, but plenty of rice and beans. There is a lot of interaction with the local natives. We get off the bus, talk to them, shop with them, buy food from them and just have a great time."

"We spend 100 percent of the time outside-the rooms don't even have screens on them. We eat nothing but the local foods; no hamburgers and hot-dogs, but plenty of rice and beans."
— David Magnussen, science department head

Cohasset high school senior Todd Bestik would agree. He "highly recommends" the trip to anyone considering it.

"It was good fun," Bestik said. "I was wondering what it would be like before I got there. We went on boats, saw birds and monkeys; we stayed on an island and went snorkeling to look at marine life there; we went caving and looked at old Mayan artifacts; and we stayed in Tikal, Guatemala, to visit the ruins and see what it looked like."

Bestik enjoyed the "nice, warm and relaxed atmosphere" of Belize.

"The natives were friendly, always smiling and we got to try our limited Spanish on them-which some of them couldn't help but kind of laugh at," he recalled. "It was a good learning experience, a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to explore one of the best reefs in the Western Hemisphere, to meet Belize natives, and I would definitely recommend it to anyone."

Magnussen has watched the trip switch its emphasis, becoming more of an academic one than simply a field trip.

The Belize trip's success has inspired companion trips, such as the one environmental science teacher Patricia McGrail led last year when The Spirit of Massachusetts schooner carried a dozen students to the Virgin Islands for a 10-day marine biology course. McGrail plans to run another field trip next year.

Concerned parents needn't worry about their children's' safety on these trips-the Belize trip will have five chaperone/instructors, all chosen by Magnussen for the variety of skills they could offer to the excursion.

The teacher cum camp counselors are: eighth-grade teacher Daniel Jones, assistant basketball coach Mark Hall (an EMT and certified rescue diver who's been on every Belize trip); Worcester State College retired Professor Paul Holly; Dr. McLaren and, of course, Magnussen.

"Parents like to hear that we have an experienced EMT and certified rescue diver on the trip," said Magnussen. "All of the chaperones have been hired for what they can offer. McLaren and Holly do the rain forest segment; McLaren also does the beach studies and coral reef studies; I do the archaeology and Mark Hall does a lot of the training for the diving and snorkeling. When you bring 23 kids on a field trip, you need a lot of very close supervision."

Magnussen fondly recalls his own initial foray into the world of field trips.

"I was lucky enough as a 15-year-old to participate in Prairie Trek's 12-weeks-long summer field trip of hiking and exploring in New Mexico and Arizona, with lots of field study, archaeology and mountain climbing," he recalled. "That was the beginning of my becoming somewhat of an adventurer."

That experience helps Magnussen in his task of guiding students through their stay in rustic places, rain forest hikes, cave exploration, electricity deprivation and McDonalds' withdrawal.

"The kids respond wonderfully," he said. "Of the 75 I've taken so far, I don't think anyone would describe it as less than wonderful. There is a fairly high percentage of these kids that go on to do something that's related to this trip and many surprisingly go back and develop an interest in Central American or Third World countries. Many students have gone two years in a row and once you bring one of the older siblings, at least one of the younger ones will come.

"Last year, we were standing on top of Temple II in Tikal, about 180 feet off the ground, on this magnificent and beautifully restored temple," he recalled. "We were overlooking a central plaza, once the heart of this trading center, when one of the boys came up to me and said, 'I look down there and I can almost see the ancient Mayans moving around in the city.' That's what we're looking for the kids to get out of this-that type of transference."

Belize bulletin

Students are forewarned to pack light, pack old (as in worn-out clothing) and bring snorkeling gear, books and journals.

Cultural anthropology will come alive for students through interactions with native Mayans that they will meet during their stays in primitive villages and while shopping at local vendors' stands.

Snorkeling in a pristine reef, hiking for several days in a rain forest and exploring a seldom-traveled cave with Mayan artifacts inside will also be enjoyed.

Highlights include visiting the Crooked Tree Bird Sanctuary to spot hundreds of different species of birds, mammals and reptiles as well as commonly seen snail kites, egrets, spoonbills, crocodiles and howler monkeys. At the Cockscomb Basin Wildlife Preserve, students will see wildlife and plant life including jaguars, ocelots, margays and pumas. The Coral Reefs at South Water Caye and its 185-mile length of the coast is home to hundreds of animal and plant species.

They will also trek through Blue Creek National Park where the Blue Hole rain forest and limestone Maya Mountains house Mayan artifacts and plant, mammal, reptile, amphibian, insect and bird species numbering in the hundreds. Tikal National Park, a 222-square mile preserve, is known for its ancient ruined city and unspoiled rain forests.

Tikal, which is the Mayan word for "lost," is the highlight of the trip for most students. Students ascend 230 feet of temple stairs during a 4:30 a.m. hike that culminates in a view of the sunrise from the temple.

"It's pretty spectacular," said Cohasset high school math and science departments chairman David Magnussen. "That climb was something that was done only by ancient priests."

Want to know what the kitchen is like in this spectacular Cohasset home? If the answer is yes, then you won't want to miss the Cohasset Kitchen Tour.

Kitchen tour a feast for the senses

Designer fabrics, lush floral arrangements and tablesettings befitting the most elegant and formal of evenings to the most comfortable and relaxing of family breakfasts. Hors d'oeuvres, finger sandwiches, pastries and sweets from the best South Shore caterers. It's all part of the South Shore Community Center's 1999 Kitchen Tour, Friday, April 9, from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

As individual as their owners, each of this year's five Cohasset kitchens reflects the vast and varied options available to today's homeowner when planning or decorating a kitchen as well as the individual style and flare of today's hostess.

Starting at Cohasset's landmark Lightkeeper's Residence, which will serve as both respite spot and marketplace, the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and common. Tour highlights include two recently renovated Georgian Colonials, an updated 1950s ranch, and a turn-of-the-century Victorian charmer.

Adding additional interest to the architectural details of the homes and personal interior design styles of the five homeowners, will be the artistry of local designers and merchants who will create tablesettings in the kitchens and dining rooms of each home, plus festive stationery options for invitations, menus and placecards designed by Notable Occasions in Hingham. And if the tablescapes have tourgoers craving a little something more, the tour includes refreshments at each home and the Lightkeeper's Residence, provided by area caterers and bakeries including Brian's Fine Desserts, Fireking Baking Co., French Memories, The Village Butcher, Morning Glories, Circe's Grotto, Sweet Surprises and The Queen of Tarts.

While at the Lightkeeper's Residence, tourgoers can view the wares of such merchants and craftspeople as Nancy O'Donnell, Pam Healey, Janet Kingan, A Matter of Taste, Notable Occasions and Flowers & Festivities.

Advance tickets may be purchased at the center or by calling (781) 383-0088. Tickets are $20 through April 1 and $25 per person beginning April 2 through the day of the tour. In addition to tour admission, each ticket offers the holder the chance to win one of five gourmet gift baskets donated by A Matter of Taste of Scituate. Additional chances on the baskets may be purchased for $1 a chance or six chances for $5. The specially designed baskets will be displayed, one at each home, throughout the day of the tour. Ticket sales are limited, so early purchase is suggested.

Funds from the 1999 Kitchen Tour will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The Center, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, is a non-profit organization founded more than 55 years ago. It is dedicated to a wide range of educational and entertaining programs for infants to seniors.

On-site wastewater management loans approved

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The on-site wastewater management plan won't require participation in a town maintenance program, but it will allow homeowners with failed septic systems to tap into a $200,000 almost interest-free loan from the state, explained Stephen Bobo of the board of health to voters at Saturday's town meeting.

Town meeting voters unanimously approved the loan, which will mean that homeowners with septic systems will have access to the loans based on environmental need, which will be ranked in a four-level system with the first level being in greatest need and fourth at the lowest.

Bobo explained to voters that they were not voting on any elements of the program itself, but just for the $200,000 from the state to provide the loans to septic system owners.

At this time, there is no priority district for the plan, but systems will be evaluated on levels of need.

Residents will only be able to request $20,000 because that's the average amount needed for septic repairs in the town at this time, Bobo said.

"There is a $600,000 revolving fund which we intend to apply for from the state," he said. "We've been led to believe that we have access to that money, also at low interest. So far, we have about 20 systems that are emergencies and we have plenty of people in town that have the need for a loan—that's 20 emergencies and 500 systems that have failed."

The article was endorsed by the capital budget committee, the advisory committee and the board of selectmen

"We originally had a plan with loans which we wanted to be unrestricted and what we have now is unrestricted loans that have an interest rate of three-quarters of 1 percent," said selectman Diane Sullivan.

Jane Goedecke, 100 Nichols Rd., wanted to know if it was the degree of a septic system's failure or the homeowner's financial need that would decide loan access.

"The loan is based on the need of the system itself," said Bobo. "Management level I is a public health situation; level II is a failed system; level III is a groundwater problem; and level IV is the least problematic."

Funds to cover extra budgeting needs

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A transfer of $494K to cover costs in various departments was approved by town meeting voters on Saturday.

The article was backed by the board of selectmen and advisory committee.

Selectman Nan Roth went over the extra budgeting needs for the current fiscal year, which included overtime for the fire and police departments ($30K each), legal expenses ($67K), Medicare tax for new town hires ($14K), school expenses ($350K) and board of selectmen expenses ($3K).

Richard Avery, advisory committee chairman, said that it's not easy to put proper numbers on budgets.

"Overtime can't be predicted," he said. "We've had a $270K increase for special education students that wasn't expected. Legal bills also have been a monster in Cohasset for a number of years. Hopefully, we'll be closer to ending the Cohasset Heights Landfill issue."

School committee chairman Rick Shea explained that out-of-district special education costs — the state mandates that schools are responsible for special education costs of children ages three-22 — was higher by $270K.

He explained that the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School utilities went over by about $40K from what was budgeted and that another unforeseen expense involved substitute coverage for faculty on sick leave or maternity absences.

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey explained that one employee needed open-heart surgery and another required extensive chemotherapy.

Town to pay legal bill

The town unanimously voted to transfer $40K in surplus revenue for town manager Mark Haddad to pay to Warner & Stackpole, a Boston law firm.

The debt is actually half the original fee charged by the firm to defend the town of Cohasset in a suit brought by the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Under Massachusetts law, a town doesn't have to pay a bill if it's rendered for services that were not provided that fiscal year. In the case of Warner & Stackpole, lengthy discussions about reducing the legal bill led the law firm to halve its bill, but they didn't get the bill to the town until the next fiscal year.

Selectman Thomas Callahan spoke on behalf of the board of selectmen who felt that the town was morally required to pay the bills it has incurred.

"We authorized them to do this work and we should pay them," he said.

The advisory committee and board of health also unanimously endorsed the article.

LEGAL NOTICE
MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE

Pursuant to and in execution of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage of real estate given by Donald H. Osterborg, Trustee of Ledgewood Realty Trust u/d/t dated 10/22/97 registered with the Norfolk Registry District of the Land Court as Document No.773973 as noted on Certificate of Title No. 150494 to David M. DelPrete dated October 22, 1997 and registered with the Norfolk Registry District of the Land Court as Document No. 773975 as noted on Certificate of Title No. 150494 of which the undersigned is the present holder, for breach of conditions of said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing, the same will be sold at public auction at 10:00 a.m. on Wednesday, April 28, 1999 on the mortgaged premises hereinafter described in said mortgage to wit:

A certain parcel of land situated on Ledgewood Drive in Cohasset, Norfolk County, Massachusetts being shown as Lot 29 on a plan drawn by Edwin A. Young, Surveyor, dated March 31, 1962, June 21, 1965 and March 9, 1967, as modified and approved by said Court, filed in the Land Registration Office as No. 31599A, a copy of a portion of which is filed in Norfolk Registry District with Certificate No. 84452, Book 423.

Being the same premises conveyed to the within mortgagor by deed of Leon P. Piatelli et ux recorded herewith.

TERMS OF SALE

The premises will be sold subject to all unpaid municipal taxes, tax titles and municipal liens. A deposit of $5,000.00 in cash or certified or a Treasurer's or Cashier's check of a Bank or Trust Company authorized to carry on business in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts will be required of the purchaser at the time and place of sale. The balance is to be paid in cash or by certified check within thirty days of said sale at the offices of Geogan & Geogan, P.C., 379 Union Street, Rockland, MA 02370. Other terms if any, to be announced at the sale.

ART NOTES

Caribbean Fare and Flare

The South Shore Art Center will host a fundraising Calypso Celebration Friday, April 30, from 7:30 - 10:30 p.m. to culminate its five-week-long international exhibit, "Uncommon Perspectives: Artists from the Caribbean." The gala event will be held at the Art Center, 119 Ripley Rd.

The evening promises a delightful mix of authentic tropical foods, island drinks and steel drum calypso music by the Afro-Caribbean pan-jazz sextet, Sunsteel. During the evening, guests will be surrounded by the exciting and thought-provoking art of the 11 distinctive contemporary Caribbean-born artists whose work make up the exhibit.

Due to the nature of the exhibit, space for this event is limited. Tickets are $50 for SSAC members and $60 for non-members through April 23. Reservations made after April 23 are $70 per person. Call the SSAC today at (781) 383-2787 for more information or to order your tickets.

Integrating fine arts in' the everyday curriculu

This Spring, the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, will offer a course designed for educators and parents with the promise to inspire and motivate great ideas in their classrooms and homes. The course will run on six Monday afternoons from April 5 to May 17, 4-6 p.m. Avis Goldstein and Lyn Titleman Rizzotto will team teach emphasizing the belief that young children can be taught "the basics" using the fine arts as the tool. Critical thinking, concept areas and skill areas can be integrated into the daily curriculum using this fine-arts approach. Each session will include lecture/information and a related hands-on activity.

Goldstein was awarded the Massachusetts Arts Educators Award in 1995. A teacher for more than 30 years, Goldstein has developed a rich and imaginative curriculum to introduce children to the exciting world of art. Integrating math, language and geography, Goldstein encourages children to master basic skills while looking and learning about arts and artists. She holds her M.Ed. from Wheelock College and her B.A. from Boston University.

Rizzotto is a Hingham art instructor, artist and book illustrator. From making rubber stamps to sketching in her garden, Rizzotto has helped children of all ages express themselves artistically for more than 25 years. Her studies include New England School of Art and Design, the Arts Students League in N.Y.C. and the School of the Museum of Fine Arts.

Professional Development Point certificates will be awarded, upon request, to educators. The cost of the course is $95 for members and $115 for non-members including materials. Please call 781-383-2787 for a complete brochure or to register.

Override tops Saturday's election ballot

Races for selectmen and health board

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

As Saturday's town election looms large and campaign signs bloom, campaigners for local boards and citizens both for and against the override are getting ready for a final push prior to Saturday's election.

"It's always a guess, but I'll say 35 percent of the town might show for the election," said town clerk Marion Douglas. "That's out of the over 5,000 registered voters in the town. Our polls will be open in town hall on Saturday, April 10, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m."

Incumbent selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Nan Roth and former water commissioner Fred Koed, are vying for two seats on the board of selectmen, while Betsy Connolly and Stephanie Noble are uncontested shoo-ins for a one-year and three-year term, respectively, on the school committee. Attorney Charles Sturdy and Dr. Robin Lawrence are in competition for an open seat on the board of health.

But the hottest item on the agenda, without a doubt, is the general override question.

Should town voters choose to support the override and raise the tax levy by $766K, the taxes on the average Cohasset home valued at

Atlantica to open on May 17

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Should all go well, the Chart House restaurant building will open May 17 with the promise of a new — and old — addition, the neighboring Olde Salt House.

"What we'd like is to offer something for everyone," said Dennis Nee, new manager for Atlantica, previously the Chart House, at 46 Border St. on the harbor. The establishment was bought by Eclectic Dining Inc., which Peter Roy, who owns the property itself, is president of. The corporation bought the property for $1.85M.

"I think it will be a tremendous boost to the village business district and a great asset to the town."

— Dean Rizzo, chairman of the village task force

Roy lives across the cove from the restaurant at The Oaks estate.

Roy's attorney, Charles Humphreys, and Nee went before selectmen this week to request a change in manager from Eric A. Stenfors, who will serve as head chef instead, to Nee; as well as support adding the adjoining Olde Salt House at 44 Border St. so that the two restaurants would operate as one entity. The Olde Salt House would be renamed The Chowder House at Atlantica, Nee said.

The add-on would effectively be part of Atlantica.

"It would be the same manager, a lot of the same food, same staff and management and outdoor weddings could be held there," said Humphreys.

Expansion plans aired

Excavating company seeks storage space

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It has been more than two years since the owners of Emmanuello Excavating unsuccessfully applied for a variance to expand a barn on their property at 71 and 75 Hull St., which is a non-conforming pre-existing commercial use in a residential neighborhood. Neighbors opposed the expansion because they claimed the larger building would be used for major repairs and could increase truck traffic near an adjacent school bus stop. But the school bus stop has been moved and two-and-one half years have passed. The Emmanuellos returned to the zoning board on Monday seeking a variance once again to expand the building, this time for equipment storage. And the neighbors also returned to oppose the expansion.

The zoning board left the hearing open until the Emmanuello family

ELECT Fred Koed

Selectman for Cohasset

SAT., APRIL 10
8AM TO 6PM

Dear Cohasset Resident,

Many of you remember me as one of the many kids in town who sailed and fished in the Harbor, or snorkeled at the Glades on a hot summer day. Others of you may remember me as your paper boy...some say I was dependable, rain or shine. I feel good about that.

Between 1976 and 1985 I was a painting contractor, starting out by myself in Cohasset and eventually moving on to Boston where I specialized in apartment and condominium decorating at Harbor Towers. In fact, some of you even remember me from my Harbor Towers contracting days. A lot has happened since those early years.

Lisa and I were married, and shortly after we purchased our first home, Ashley was born, and I began serving town government. Mariel was born four years later. I am very proud of my daughters' achievements in Cohasset Public Schools.

Serving on various town boards and committees has been an education for me. I have served with many of you on these boards and committees, and I value the trust you have given me in the past as fellow committee members, or as voters.

I am seeking the office of Selectman because I have much more to contribute to the town, and I think that I can best share that knowledge with you from a position of leadership. I have the diverse experience of having served in three different positions in Cohasset, building the consensus needed to bring people together and move forward. This is detailed knowledge that I can put to work for you to solve your problems!

I believe that if you examine the broad experience and the leadership positions I have held on both elective and appointed boards, you will agree that I will offer Cohasset a common sense approach to the challenges now facing town government.

Please consider my qualifications, and cast one of your two votes for me this Saturday, April 10.

Sincerely, Fred R. Koed

Firefighter recognized for dedicated service

On call for 29 years

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Hermon J. Maynard got a standing ovation at town meeting. No he wasn't one of the unsung heroes stepping down from a town committee and he didn't give any long-winded speeches on an article.

Except for his family and many friends in town, most residents have probably never heard of the 73-year-old King Street resident.

And that's just fine with the self-effacing septuagenarian who isn't someone to brag about himself.

But selectmen decided that town meeting was the appropriate forum to recognize Maynard's 29 years of service as a call firefighter in town.

You see, Maynard is one of those rare breed of men and women who jump out of bed in the middle of the night to help fight fires. They get paid very little but find that it's a way of giving back to the town they love.

As Bruce Pratt, president of the Cohasset Firemen's Benefit Association, explains, call firefighters are there to augment the permanent firefighters.

At current staff levels, there are four or five firefighters to respond to a fire.

"They get the equipment to the fire and need help to put the fire out," Pratt said. "That's our role, that's what we're trained to do."

Maynard, who is a father of five and grandfather of nine, owned and operated a fire equipment supply business on Rt. 3A in Marshfield for 20 years until he sold it in 1979. At the time the Maynards lived in Marshfield near the fairgrounds.

When his parents passed away, Maynard moved his family back to the family home in Cohasset. On his mother's side, Maynard's ancestors including the Lincolns and the Southers date back 300 years in town.

Once in town, it didn't take long for Maynard to make his way down to fire headquarters.

"I asked Chief Charles Pipenbrink if I could get on the fire department," Maynard recalled.

What followed was nearly three decades of service that included helping fight about 1/2 dozen working fires a year and innumerable smaller fires, like brush fires.

But last summer when a million dollar home on Atlantic Avenue burned down, Mayard decided it was time to step aside.

Hermon Maynard outside his home on King Street. Maynard was honored at town meeting for his 29 years as a call firefighter in town.

During the fire which took 50 firefighters from five towns six hours to put out, the World War II Navy veteran was taken to the hospital suffering from smoke inhalation and heat exhaustion.

"I just passed out because of the heat of the fire and the heavy gear I had on," Maynard said. "Afterwards, I started thinking of my family and thought I'd better get off the call department.

"I can't pull a hose through the woods in a forest fire like I used to," he said. "So there comes a time to step aside and let the younger ones take over."

"I can't pull a hose through the woods in the forest like I used to. So there comes a time to step aside and let the younger ones take over."
— Hermon Maynard

Even though he won't be going to calls, the special radio that alerts call firefighters is still by his bed. A police/fire scanner is always on in the background in his living room and his turnout gear is still in the trunk of his car.

So while the younger call firefighters are responding, you can bet Maynard will be paying attention.

The small yearly stipend he received from the town was a nice thank you, he said.

"But you'd do it if you had to free of charge," said Maynard whose son Steven is also a call firefighter in town. "You'd do it as a volunteer if you had to."

Pratt, the association president, has nothing but praise for Maynard.

"He was an excellent firefighter. He always held up his end and did his part," he said.

Selectmen presented Maynard with a proclamation recognizing that he fulfilled his duties with bravery and honor and commended him for his meritorious service to the town and its inhabitants.

Call firefighters will kick of their drive to raise money for the purchase of a $25,000 thermal imaging camera during the town election Saturday. A table will be set up in the vicinity of town hall and informational pamphlets will be available.

Lyons Fire Equipment of Stoughton will provide one of the helmet-mounted cameras for display between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The cameras enable firefighters to spot people through smoke.

Donations may be sent to Thermal Imaging Camera Fund, C/o CFBA, PO Box 251, Cohasset 02025.

Beechwood Street culvert is crumbling

Town asks state to pay for replacement

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Culverts aren't all that interesting to most people and the one under Beechwood Street is no exception.

But the Beechwood Street culvert, located at the intersection of Mill Lane, could collapse because of structural problems. If the culvert crumbles, the road will collapse, and that would interest every person who drives or walks on Beechwood Street. Town officials are asking the Massachusetts Highway Department (Mass Highway) to provide $350,000 to repair the culvert.

"It is deteriorating, and the longer it goes, the worse it gets."
— DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is waiting for the state to respond to the town's request for funding. If the state does not fund the culvert project, then town officials will have to seek money from town meeting for the project, Haddad said.

State highway inspectors examined the bridge and determined that it needed to be replaced Two years ago, town meeting appropriated $50,000 for a design and engineering study of the Beechwood Street culvert.

DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield said the culvert is in very poor shape.

"It is deteriorating, and the longer it goes, the worse it gets," Litchfield said. "The culvert is half-stone, and the other half is steel pipe that we used when we widened the road. The steel is rusting away. The road could just collapse at some point."

The project is already part of the state's Transportation Improvement Program for fiscal years 2000-2005. The culvert serves Bound Brook, and Beechwood Street is a major link between Cohasset and the towns of Norwell and Scituate.

Haddad has informed state officials of the urgency of the project and the need to replace the culvert immediately. He said the town has made a formal request to Mass Highway for immediate funding for the project.

"It is crucial that this project be funded as soon as possible," Haddad said.

Norwell site of regional studio

By Alison Cohen
STAFF WRITER

Location, location, location. Norwell has it all — and it led MediaOne to choose Norwell as the site of its new regional television studio and administrative offices. Scituate and Hanover were strong contenders for the facility as well.

"We want to be in place and open for business by the end of the year."
— Lou Russo of MediaOne

According to developer George Williams of the Williamsburg Company, MediaOne plans to build a 10,000-square-foot building in the Breezy Bend Office Park on Route 53.

According to Lou Russo, MediaOne's manager of government affairs, the cable television and communications company hopes to break ground in late spring.

"We want to be in place and open for business by the end of the year," Russo said. She did not know how many employees would be housed in the new facility.

Williams said the building will cost an estimated $1 million to construct. Until the permit process is complete, Williams could not say when construction might begin.

"Geographically, you can't beat the site," said Lou Russo, MediaOne's manager of government affairs. The Norwell location is convenient to Routes 3, 53, 228 and 123, she said, and provides ready access for staff, volunteers and customers of the cable television and communications company.

Under an agreement with Scituate, the North Scituate studio, which also serves Cohasset, will remain open at least until Dec. 31. Its future after that date is uncertain.

$341,000 will increase by $409.35. The override accounts for $276.31 of that increase. The anticipated tax rate for FY2000, which begins July 1, is $16.15 per $1,000 of assessed valuation.

Leonora Jenkins, president of the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, is urging voters not to vote for the override.

"I don't think we should support it, considering we've gotten into this situation through unrestrained spending in the schools," she said. "Basically, 98 percent of this override situation was brought on through school spending."

Susan Galligan is president of the Committee for Quality Town Services, which supports the override.

"We're a group of about a dozen people who are largely supportive of the public school system, are or were active in the school, and all have children in the school presently," she said.

Galligan said that her group's members have attempted to educate themselves about what's in the budget and are confident that it's not a frills budget. She argues that the school budget is largely taken up with contractual obligations to the teachers, which she maintains must be met for moral and ethical reasons, and that a good amount of the budget went toward providing those salaries and special education.

"We'd like to see the override passed," she said. "The indication at town meeting is that the override question passed quite nicely and wasn't met with a tremendous amount of opposition. I'm not positive that that was a good cross section of the whole town, or that the voters who will come to the polls on Saturday will be either. But we're hoping that's the case."

Jenkins maintains that she helped start CCT because of her years of volunteering for the school and her growing sense of funding mismanagement there.

"What concerns me about these 'yes' people is that they don't know what they're voting on," she said. "They don't realize what they're doing, because they're given partial information and they're just not fully informed taxpayers. I think they're largely new to the town, and this is killing the town for the older residents who are so distraught about possibly having to leave because they can't afford it here."

A less contentious override question on the ballot is the debt exclusion asking for $1.3M to pay to connect 24 homes near Lily Pond to the town sewer.

If it passes, taxpayers will pick up half the cost of the project. That amounts to an additional 3 cents to the tax rate. Should the override fail, the users will pay for the entire sewer project through betterments.

Whether or not the board of selectmen will take on a new face will depend on the voters' choice between McMorris, Roth and Koed.

For voters, the choice comes down to three popular figures.

"At this time, I think it's very close, so we're going to keep running right through," said Fred Koed. "We're just following through with our campaign plan. We thought it would take $5,000 to run this campaign, and we raised that. Everything is going as planned."

Roth, who has maintained a low-key campaign, has said, "I believe that I have the knowledge, energy and skill to provide leadership to the citizens of Cohasset. We must plan for the future of Cohasset in the next century and address the pressures of development, economic, environmental and transportation needs in a comprehensive and careful manner."

For Ronnie McMorris, the election has offered her feedback on her work as selectmen chairman.

"The campaign is going great and I've thoroughly enjoyed talking with residents," she said. "In the three years I've served, I've met so many interesting people. I found that the election process has provided me with a real affirmation of the job I've been doing. People have been positive and wonderful, and I feel great."

Excavating company seeks storage space

provides photographs of their equipment.

Attorney Robert Devin of Hingham represented the Emmanuellos before the zoning board. Devin said he believed the project did not legally require a variance because it did not meet the standards set forth in case law. Devin said there is a three-part test the courts apply to see if a project needs a variance.

The first part asks whether the current use reflects the intent of the original bylaw. Devin said the construction yard has been on the same spot since the 1930s, before Cohasset even had zoning bylaws. He said the land had always been used as a construction yard, and the building expansion would not change that usage.

The second part of the test asks if the project will produce a difference in the quality, character or degree of use. Devin said storing the equipment inside would only serve to improve the visual quality of the yard.

The final test attempts to determine if the change will result in a current use that is different in kind or effect on the neighborhood. Devin said the expanded building would not result in additional truck traffic in the area. He added that the expansion of the building would pass the state's three-part test and would not constitute an expansion of use at the property.

"We're not proposing an increase in traffic or equipment," Devin said. "Whether you approve this or not, the equipment will be on the site. There will always be equipment moving on and off the site. It's not going to go away. That's not realistic. What this will do is improve the property."

Building Inspector Robert Egan disagreed with Devin. He said the addition was large enough to constitute an expansion of use, which does require a variance.

Several residents opposed the addition on the grounds that it would pose safety a safety hazard to the neighborhood. David Ronan of 65 Hull St. said the construction yard already affected property values in the neighborhood and contributed to traffic problems.

"I'm in construction and I think I agree with the building inspector that the addition would increase the non-conforming use," Ronan said. "It's detrimental to my family to have this repair facility within 100 feet of my kitchen."

Devin said the larger building would be used only for minor repairs and maintenance — oil changes and waxing — during inclement weather.

Therese D'Urso of 85 Hull St. opposed the expansion in 1996 and she opposed it again on Monday night. D'Urso said the Emmanuello's property is a blight that produces dust, fumes and vibrations in the neighborhood.

"This non-conforming use is already detrimental to the residents of this neighborhood," D'Urso said. "Granting the variance will be dangerous, noxious and offensive to the residents of the neighborhood. Their trucks have damaged my lawn, driven over my property, and deposited sand, salt and soil on my property."

Members of the Emmanuello family denied D'Urso's claims. Albert Emmanuello accused the abutters of lying.

The members of the zoning board said they will have to examine all the documents related to the case— including their previous decision and related case law — before rendering a decision.

Zoning board considers variance for bay window

Susan Acton of 269 Atlantic Ave. wants to put a bay window in her home to expand the size of one room for some furniture that has been in her family for generations. There's just one problem: the window will violate the town's setback regulations — by nine inches. Acton presented her case before the zoning board Monday. She said she needs to expand the size of one room in her house to make use of a family dining room set. But three sides of her house do not conform with the town's setback requirements because of expansions by previous owners. The only side of the house that is in conformance with the 15-foot setback requirement is 15-feet, nine-inches from the property line. The bay window would overhang the building and reduce the setback to 14-feet, three inches.

The planning board took Acton's plan without comment. Zoning board member Ben Lacy informed Acton that she is going to have a great deal of trouble overcoming the town's variance rules and showing that she has a demonstrable need for the change to the building.

The members of the zoning board closed the public hearing and will render a decision at a future date. No abutters opposed the project.

Polls to close at 6 p.m.

Selectman Merle Brown wanted to remind town voters that the election polls will be open Saturday, April 10, at town hall, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., and no later.

"This is not like state voting," he said. "I know a lot of people come in at 6:30 p.m. and wonder what happened. I hope everyone gets out to vote."

Sally Lincoln will be missed

Selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris said assistant town treasurer Sally Lincoln will be missed.

"She was a hard worker throughout her illness, a real fighter, and we're sorry," she said.

Town manager Mark Haddad said that town hall would be effectively closed down Tuesday at 1 p.m. to allow employees to attend her funeral. Lincoln passed away Sunday at her home in Hingham. See obituary page 32.

Recyclable oil for the town?

Selectman Merle Brown said that he attended a state program on recycling oil.

Brown said that the meeting was interesting.

"I learned that re-refined oil is just as good as new oil, but it costs less," he said.

Tebbetts resigns from housing partnership

A letter of resignation from Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts from the Cohasset Housing Partnership after 15 years of service was accepted by selectmen Tuesday night.

Town manager Mark Haddad explained that the role of a town's housing partnership is to review and develop affordable housing proposals.

"The group really doesn't have the statutory authority to build," he said. "But you have to have an active partnership in every town to qualify for state funding."

Important tax information

Town Manager Mark Haddad said due to a computer glitch important information was deleted from the fourth-quarter tax bills.

The by-laws require a breakdown of where tax money goes to be included in the tax bills.

The following information was omitted: general government accounts for 23.28 percent of the budget; public safety, 18.46 percent and education, 58.26 percent, Haddad said. The tax rate id $14.95.

Leonara Jenkins, president of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, pointed the omission out to selectmen Tuesday.

Strait's Pond spraying April 14

Per approval of the Cohasset and Hull Conservation Commissions, a pesticide application will be made on Straits Pond at 8:30 a.m. on April 14, according Kevin O'Brien, Hull public health director.

If weather problems delay the application, the operation will be scheduled on the next appropriate day, O'Brien said in a memo to selectmen.

The application is performed via a boat, he said. The product applied is ABATE 1SG with the texture of beach sand. The pests to be controlled are chironomid midges.

"Application will be to the surface of the pond," O'Brien said in the memo. "Sand granules and boat application are being used to ensure that the pesticide goes to the pond bottom and there will be no pesticide drift."

Parking permission is sought

The senior center is seeking permission to park on one side of the street near St. Stephen's on Wednesdays. The center already has permission to park there on Tuesdays and Thursdays during luncheons.

On Wednesday there are two groups at the senior center, including one of 10 or more and a bridge group of about 20-24.

Community service project

Glenn A. Pratt of the cemetery study committee said there are a number of students who are willing to take on the task of compiling an inventory of the ancient section of the Beechwood Cemetery as their high school community service project.

The cemetery committee has wanted to have the ancient section of the cemetery inventories, so there will be a record of the inscriptions and the interments before the stones erode anymore.

Pratt said the students would work a few hours a day depending on their class schedules. Peter Laugelle of the DPW will look in on them each day and the committee will monitor their progress, he said.

AROUND TOWN

NEW ARRIVAL

We'll bet anything that Clyde and Louise Baker and Jean Baker spent part of the holiday weekend in Norwell this year — and they have their very own little bunny to love and to celebrate with! Her name is Julia Elizabeth Baker and she was born Feb. 25 at 1:08 p.m., weighed 7 lbs. 11 oz. and was 20 inches long. Her mom and dad, Ariane Littig and Robert Baker, are probably still hopping all over the place (who doesn't hop for a beautiful baby). You can be sure that Julia's maternal grandparents, Andrew and Carol Littig from Foxboro, also celebrated their little granddaughter in the grandest style! Hope that all of you had a super time enjoying that baby!

ST. PAUL SCHOOL

There will be five Cohasset students graduating from St. Paul's in Hingham this spring; all eighth-graders with a plan for next fall already in place. Samantha Canton and Laura Kondrat will both go to Notre Dame Academy in Hingham; Jim French, Mac Chase and Joseph Roach are all going to travel to Boston College High School. We wish all of you the best, and hope that you will keep us up to date on all that goes on in your future — we know that you will shine.

TOP SPELLER

Did you know that there is a star in the midst of the Cohasset High School/Middle School? And that he is one of the best spellers in the state? Well, his name is David Ingber, and he is the best! He was the returning Spelling Bee champion from the middle school, and he placed 10th in the Regionals — that's the highest in Cohasset High School history, folks! Be sure to tell David how proud you are of him the next time you see him; he definitely deserves accolades!

COLLEGE HOOP

We received word from Hamilton College that Cohasset's own Pete Bishop (a senior) played very well all season as a member of the men's basketball team. Congratulations!

Children of the First Parish Nursery School gather around "Lydia Hobart" (religious education director Jacqueline Clark) to celebrate the 275th birthday of the Nehemiah Hobart House (Parish House). For this week's worship news see page 31.

ARTWORK ON INTERNET

Had a nice note from Jackie Wirth, an artist extraordinaire who lives in Cohasset. Jackie's work is on the Net now, with a group of artists from all over the country. That is so exciting; we all know Jackie's work; now everyone, everywhere will! Congratulations, Jackie.

DEAN'S LIST

Kathleen E. Donovan, a junior and resident of Cohasset, was named to the dean's list at Nichols College for the fall 1998 semester. Nice work, Kathleen!

DANCE CONCERT

The Cambridge School of Weston Annual Student Dance Concert entitled "Rrrhh!!" was held this year in early March. Kelsey Henderson, a sophomore and daughter of Warner and Barbara Henderson, participated in this year's concert. Each year in January, student dancers begin the process of choreographing and preparing offerings for the dance concert. They participate in a choreography seminar each week to be critiqued. In February, each piece is again judged, then voted on. This year 16 pieces made the grade. Kelsey danced in "Winds on the Weather," wearing an ivory dress, and she danced to perfection! In fact, she shined, to quote the news release. And, you can bet that her folks could see the rays all over the concert hall.

FOLK GROUP AT CHS

This Saturday, April 10, is a special one at the Cohasset High School cafeteria — the folk group, PBJ will be there, a huge success last time — the cost is $5 per person. There will be refreshments and the doors open at 7:30 (showtime is 8 p.m.). The reviews were outstanding before, don't miss anything!

CONSIGNMENT SHOP

Finally, did you know that the grand opening was April 5 — at Tedeschi Plaza — at the former Woolworth's location? What opening? The Cohasset Consignment Shop, of course! There is much-needed extra space, thus a bigger selection . . . all astute shoppers will be there!

GOOD NEWS WANTED

That seems to be the news we have received for the moment, but we anxiously await yours; please give me a call, I'll take care of the rest!

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

- ★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first served basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.
- ★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.
- ★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.
- ★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.
- ★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.
- ★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.
- ★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.
- ★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.
- ★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.
- ★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.
- ★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

ART NOTES

"Seaside Garden with Lilies" by Lois Griffel in on exhibit at the Christopher Gallery.

Impressionism at Christopher Gallery

In celebration of the centennial anniversary of The Cape Cod School of Art, the Christopher Gallery presents the works of Lois Griffel. The public is invited to attend an opening reception Saturday, April 10, from 7 to 10 p.m. The exhibition will hang through May 15. All of the paintings included in the show are available for purchase and admission is free.

Griffel is the current director of the Provincetown-based art school founded in 1899 by impressionist Charles Hawthorne. The Cape Cod School is the oldest "plein-air" art school in the country. Plein-air is a term describing painting outdoors in natural light.

In 1935, Charles Hawthorne's protege, Henry Hensche, became the school's director and expanded on Hawthorne's approach to painting nature's different light effects. Lois Griffel's introduction to Hensche, in the early 1970s led to her in-depth study and practice of impressionism. She in turn developed her own methods of passing on this rich painting legacy.

Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 383-1841.

Art and cookies with heart

On Saturday, April 10, at the South Shore Art Center, a free art workshop is being offered by Therapy and the Performing Arts (TPA) for children with special needs. The children, joined by siblings and parents, and guided by the Center's instructor, Nancy Connolly, will make Spring Greeting Cards for family and friends. In addition to the cards, the children will draw pictures on the theme of "Happiness" and one child's design may be chosen by the Genesis Fund for this year's Children's Miracle Network Broadcast, on June 6.

As a special treat, the workshop will wrap-up with a Cookie Party hosted by Archway Cookies, one of the sponsors of The Genesis Fund and noted for their "Cookies for Kids" contributions to the Children's Miracle Network Broadcast. Children can decorate and eat cookies, and then help build a cookie castle with colored frostings and Archway cookies.

To learn more about this event and how your special needs child can join in on the fun, call Therapy and the Performing Arts at (781) 575-1258.

John Arapoff at Staircase Gallery

"Each time I paint it is a challenge and a new adventure," says Marshfield Artist John Arapoff whose paintings are featured at South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery from through the end of April.

Unlike many painters, Arapoff is known, not solely as a watercolor or an oil or an acrylic painter, but as a painter using all medias. He chooses his media depending upon the circumstances.

Admission to the Staircase Gallery is free, and the public is welcome to view the exhibit from Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon. South Shore Conservatory in Hingham is located at One Conservatory Dr. For more information, call (781) 749-7565, ext. 16.

Caribbean Fare and Flare

The South Shore Art Center will host a fundraising Calypso Celebration Friday, April 30, from 7:30 - 10:30 p.m. to culminate its five-week-long international exhibit, "Uncommon Perspectives: Artists from the Caribbean." The gala event will be held at the Art Center, 119 Ripley Rd.

The evening promises a delightful mix of authentic tropical foods, island drinks and steel drum calypso music by the Afro-Caribbean pan-jazz sextet, Sunsteel. During the evening, guests will be surrounded by the exciting and thought-provoking art of the 11 distinctive contemporary Caribbean-born artists whose work make up the exhibit.

Due to the nature of the exhibit, space for this event is limited. Tickets are $50 for SSAC members and $60 for non-members through April 23. Reservations made after April 23 are $70 per person. Call the SSAC today at (781) 383-2787 for more information or to order your tickets.

Task force on affordability

Town Clerk Marion Douglas hopes the weather will be fine on Saturday. That's because more of us tend to vote on a nice day.

While we understand that inclement weather can keep us away from the polls, we hope all registered voters get out to cast their votes.

There's a lot at stake.

Two overrides are on the ballot in addition to a hot, three-way selectman's race and a race for an open seat on board of health.

Ballot question #1 is going to have an impact on all property taxpayers in town.

The "general" Prop. 2-1/2 override asks voters to increase the tax levy by $766,000. This will account for $276 of the $409 hike in taxes on the so-called average valued home of $341,000.

We agree with a majority of selectmen that most residents do not want the kind of cuts in services that will ensue if the override fails.

That being said, however, we challenge selectmen to set in motion a "Task Force on Affordability" no matter what the outcome Saturday.

Hingham did that after the acrimonious, divisive debate of the $40 million debt-exclusion vote to renovate and expand two schools in that town.

As Cohasset heads into the 21st century, we need to decide what kind of town we want to be.

Yes, there's the gold coast and the rich people. That's the stereotypical brush that the rest of the South Shore likes to paint us with.

But there's another side to town that is made up of hundreds middle-class families and senior citizens who provide a measure of economic diversity here.

With numerous overrides looming ahead, Cohasset is in danger of becoming too exclusive. It would be a real shame if no one but the wealthy could afford to live in this beautiful place.

The task force should be formed quickly and be charged with looking into a variety of areas from how to attract more affordably priced housing to seeking ways to increase the commercial tax base while keeping the town's character in tact. On the latter matter, the committee could work closely with the Growth and Development Task Force.

Cohasset has always been blessed with talented, creative people. Let's hope some of them can put their heads together to work toward keeping our taxes under control.

Teachers salaries are clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

In my last week as Chairman of the School Committee, I feel compelled to respond to comments reported in this newspaper regarding the salaries of Cohasset teachers. When one selectman talks of "years of 10% increases," that is simply inaccurate. When the actual salary information is explained in detail, but the selectman continues to talk of 10% increases, that is not merely "intellectually dishonest," it is intentionally dishonest.

Cohasset teacher salaries start at $27,893 (FY 1999, Bachelors degree). A teacher then receives an annual cost of living increase of 3% and moves up one "step," a 5% increase. After reaching the top step, which is a salary of $47,154 for a bachelors degree and $51,838 for a masters degree, a teacher receives only the cost of living increase. However, a teacher can also receive an additional one-time increase by completing an approved graduate school program.

In our negotiations with the teachers for their new contract, we reviewed the teacher salaries for five nearby districts. We found that for teachers with a bachelors degree and a masters degree, the Cohasset salaries were about average. However, the salaries of the teachers with the most education and experience were below the average. Those teachers with master degree plus 30 credits (the equivalent of an additional masters program) and masters plus 60 credits (the equivalent of a doctoral program) will be given a one-time 3.5% increase next year. This increase will bring those salaries to the lower of Hingham or Hanover teacher salaries and still below the Norwell teacher salaries. The teacher salaries are above those of Scituate and Hull.

The School Committee and the Superintendent strongly support paying our teachers at least average salaries. Cohasset teachers consistently work well beyond their contractual workday. When the block schedule was implemented at the high school two years ago, all the high school teachers were asked to significantly increase their in-class time with no additional compensation. They did so because of the positive and cooperative working relationship that has been developed here in Cohasset, reinforced by strong community support for education.

It is quite telling that the three selectmen who spent a considerable amount of time reviewing the school budget, support it. The Town Manager and the Advisory Committee also invested a great deal of time in understanding the school budget, and they too support it. They know that it is not teacher salaries that are driving school budget increases, it is mandated but under funded special education services. The increase in those costs is more than 43% of the total budget increase.

We clearly need to accelerate our efforts to convince the Governor and the legislature to increase state funding for these services, particularly for suburban towns such as ours, which have been forced into an excessive reliance on the property tax to fund local services. The low level of state funds returned to suburban towns for education is central to this problem.

In the meantime, we can not solve problem by underpaying our teachers. We must not demand above average performance from our teachers while paying below average wages. Please listen to those town officials who have taken the time to understand school finances. They have done their homework. They support this budget.

Support for override urged

TO THE EDITOR:

Town officials did an excellent job of detailing what is behind the 1999-2000 town operating budget at town meeting. It is too bad that there weren't more voters present to hear the facts and to ask questions for themselves. Nonetheless, the town budget as approved at town meeting must be passed. It is as those in attendance heard, a "maintenance budget". The school side increase is

Selectmen declare public health week

Whereas the health of all people is one true measure of a Town's commitment to social justice; and,

Whereas the health of Americans is linked to the health of people throughout the world; and,

Whereas all nations of the world, acting through the World Health Organization, of which the United States is an active member, are pledged to the goal of Health for All by the Year 2000; and,

Whereas This is an occasion to educate and inform, to encourage increased community involvement, to focus on the unity of our concerns for a better quality of life; and,

Whereas healthy lifestyles have a significant impact on the health and well-being of all Americans; and,

Whereas the Town of Cohasset, recognizing that healthy living and healthy aging are major health concerns in the United States and that individual, community, national and global collaboration is essential to promoting good health.

Therefore, we, the Board of Selectman, do hereby declare April 5 – 11 as Public Health Week and urge all citizens to take part in activities and observances designed to champion public health worldwide efforts to promote healthy living.

largely comprised of teacher renumeration (up 6.6% substantially contractual) and special education costs (up 13.1%) ninety-one percent or $660,000 of the school budget increase relates to these two categories. Only $64,000 or $50.20 per student for the 1,275 students in the system relates to other costs.

There are no "frills" included.

It was made clear that we as tax payers should put pressure on our state legislatures to attempt to gain a greater reimbursement from the state for special education costs; currently only 17% of special education costs are reimbursed by the state. The school committee is also attempting to seek alternative funding sources for school related costs. A subcommittee has been set up to look into possibilites along these lines.

In a community where 92% of the tax base is residentially oriented, the bulk of any operating budget increases must be shouldered by the tax payers.

Cohasset has a fine school system. The dedicated staff, high MCAS scores, and college placements of which we can be proud. We must hold the line and vote "yes" on Question #1 in support of our town's operating budget as approved at town meeting.

Race for Millenium Baby starts today!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, guys, tonight's the night. (Or last night and too late if you're reading this on Thursday.)

The people who keep track of such things have figured that a child who has been conceived on April 7, 1999, has the best chance to win the coveted title of Millenium Baby, the first child born on Jan. 1, 2000.

But before you start, be aware that the odds against you are almost as long as the Red Sox winning the World Series before 2018, the 100th anniversary of the last time.

But before you start, be aware that the odds against you are almost as long as the Red Sox winning the World Series before 2018, the 100th anniversary of the last time.

The chances of conceiving on April 7 are roughly one in four and the chances of the act reaching fruition on Jan. 1, exactly 268 days later, are, at best, one out of 20. It's easier winning the lottery, but not much.

There are other drawbacks, too, like the last baby born on Dec, 31, 1999, earns a full year's income tax deduction for dad and the first baby in year 2000 gets his or her picture taken by the local newspaper and little else

.I don't know if any prizes are being offered for conceiving the 21st Century's first citizen but at last reports a New Zealand radio station was trying to round up 100 pubescent couples to make a race of it for its listeners.

The advent of the millenium — or Y2K, as those in the know among us are wont to say — is causing concern around the world, chiefly because computers were designed to read the year '00 as 1900 rather than 2000.

It's of particular concern in Israel which is expecting a massive influx of exotic Christian cults who want to be in Jerusalem in case Y2K turns out to be really Armageddon.

Already, the Israelis have expelled members of a cult that call themselves Concerned Christians, who, with their leader Monte Kim Miller, came to the Middle East to die in the belief it will hasten the second coming of Christ.

Remember Waco and Jonestown!

Ironically, in Israel, where this is the year 5759, the millenium is 241 years away, and with Israel's Muslim population, who will turn the year 1420 next April 17, the millenium is even farther off, 580 years to be exact.

Even Christians can't agree on Jan. 1, 2000 as the date of the millenium.

A large group maintains it is Jan. 1, 2001, since there was no year zero on their calendar, which went from the year 1 BC to 1 AD without missing a day.

And another group thinks the millenium actually passed in 1996 or maybe even 1993, since Jesus, whose birth started it all, may have been born as late as 4 BC or as early as 7 BC.

"We are living at least in the year 2002," says the Rev. Paige Patterson, president of the Southern Baptist Convention. "We have already made it into the next millenium."

Meanwhile, the race still goes on for the distinction of siring and foaling the Millenium Baby.

Go to it, guys.

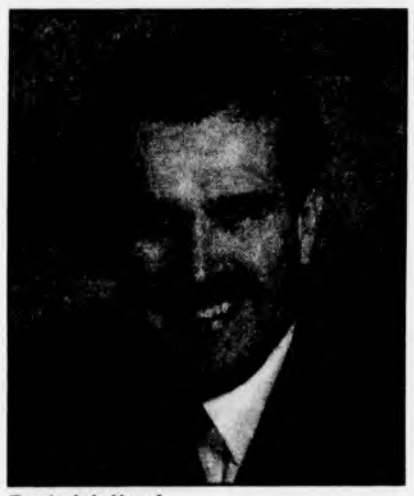
MEET THE CANDIDATES

Selectmen

Name: Frederick Koed
Age: 47
Family: Wife, Lisa; daughters Ashley and Mariel
Address: 92 Pleasant Street
Years in town: 38 years
Occupation: Computer systems analyst
Education: Cohasset High School, 1969; University of Massachusetts; UMB McCormack Institute, MS public affairs
Civic/municipal experience: Advisory Committee, 1983-1987, Chm. 1986-87, Housing Authority, 1987-1992; Water Commission, 1994-1997, Chm. 1994-1997
Reasons for seeking office: Five years ago I was elected to the Cohasset Water Commission. Within 60 days of my election, the water distribution system failed. These were trying times for Cohasset.

I worked with other boards to build a consensus. We held public hearings, we listened to what the people had to say and we began to design a solution.

Within one year, the Forest Avenue loop and the Beechwood improvements were complete. I'm proud of the fact that Forest Avenue now has one mile of new water mains and hydrants past homes that previously had little protection.



Frederick Koed

I learned a lot about leadership, communication and trust during these times. Today I see equally great challenges facing the town. I am committed to facing the issues that are important to the people of Cohasset. I believe we can find common solutions to our most important challenges. I hope you agree.

Civic/municipal experience: Board of Selectmen, member and chairman; Conservation Commission, member and past chairman; Open Space Committee; Elder Affairs Board; Downtown Revitalization Task Force; Parent School Organization (PSO) Executive Board; classroom volunteer; soccer, softball and basketball coach; METCO host family.
Reason for seeking office: During the three years I have served on the board of selectmen we have tackled many long-standing problems and have made significant progress. We have seen major capital and environmental improvements, more efficient management and long-term financial planning.

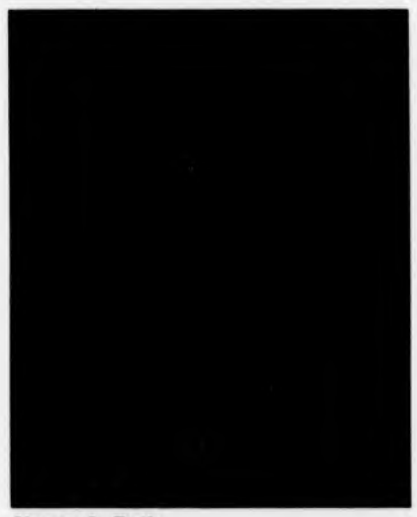
Cohasset faces many future challenges as we balance the need to maintain and improve services with the responsibility to keep taxes affordable, and as we strive to preserve and protect those qualities which make Cohasset such a desirable place to live.

Roseanne Marmo McMorris

I care about that future. I'm raising my family here, and I plan to retire here. I will use the knowledge and experience I have gained to continue to provide leadership to the town as we address these challenges together.

Name: Nancy A. Roth
Age: 50
Family: Husband, Dennis; three sons, Henry 14, John 12, Sam 9
Address: 7 Highland Ave.
Years in town: 14
Occupation: Teacher
Education: Middlebury College, B.A.; Brandeis University, Heller School, master's in management of human services (MMHS); Lesley College, M.Ed.
Civic/municipal experience: Advisory Committee, 1989-1995; Selectmen, 1996-1999; Village Revitalization Committee; MBTA Mitigation Committee; PSO.
Reason for seeking office: Over the past three years I have had the opportunity to work with many wonderful citizens of Cohasset to rebuild our infrastructure, implement a town manager form of government and meet the complex issues confronting our town every day. I have enjoyed facing these challenges, and believe that I have the knowledge, skill and energy to continue to provide leadership to the town in the future.

My goals for the next three years on the board of selectmen include continuing to pull our diverse boards and citizens together to balance our desires for more and better services with the limitations on our ability to pay. I support long term planning for Cohasset, clarifying a vision for the next century and coordinating long term capital programs with our operating budget needs to provide the greatest possible stability in our tax rate.



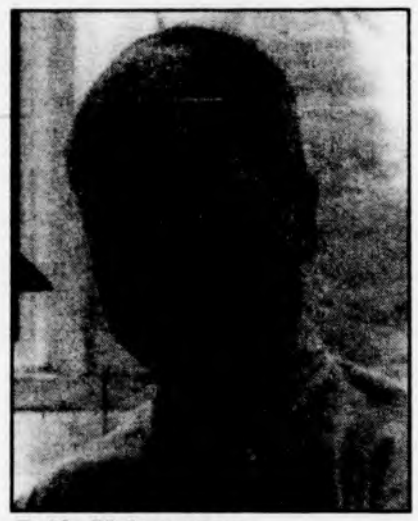
Nancy A. Roth

As selectman I believe in working with others in our community with respect, an open mind, and a commitment to preserving the diversity and special character of Cohasset.

Health Board

Name: Robin M. Lawrence
Age: 59
Family: Wife, Marylou (married for 28 years), English/psychology teacher, Norwell High School; son, Robin Jr. 25, management consultant; daughter, Colby 23, editor.
Address: 15 Beach St., Cohasset
Years in town: 25
Occupation: Healthcare consultant — public health, oral health, primary care services
Education: Bachelor of arts degree (BA), Columbia College; doctor of dental surgery degree (DDS), Columbia University; master of public health degree (MPH), University of Michigan
Civic/municipal experience: Served as the senior executive for the U.S. Public Health Service responsible for six state New England region; Sandy Beach Association Board of Trustees; Cohasset Maritime Institute Board of Directors; Hull Lifesaving Museum Board of Directors
Reason for seeking office: I have worked in public health at the national and state levels for 25 years and want to bring my expertise to the community for which I care so deeply.

I want to continue Cohasset residents' strong commitment to a safe and healthy environment.

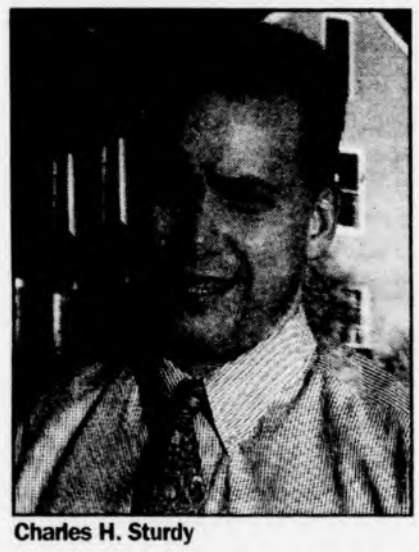


Robin M. Lawrence

I want to assist our very accomplished Health Officer and our very capable Board of Health in effecting their public health responsibilities.

I want to assist the community in meeting future public health challenges through innovative and imaginative problem-solving.

Name: Charles H. Sturdy
Age: 28
Family: Single (engaged to Stacy Pierce of Cohasset, September 1999 wedding)
Address: 270 Jerusalem Road
Years in town: 26 years
Occupation: Attorney in corporate department at Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar
Education: B.A. in economics, Haverford College, Haverford, PA.; J.D. Boston University School of Law
Civic/municipal experience: No prior
Reason for seeking office: I am running for the board of health for two reasons. First of all, I believe that the board of health will be addressing several interesting issues in the next three years which will be of significant concern to many Cohasset taxpayers. In particular, the Board will likely have to react to the results of the Study of the Little Harbor area and the continuing problems associated with failed on-site septic systems throughout the town.



Charles H. Sturdy

Secondly, I believe that my legal background would provide a benefit to the Board of Health as it works through many of these issues and the complex regulatory framework which surround them.

Vote Saturday
April 10
Polls open at Town Hall 8am-6pm

Absentee ballots available until noon Friday

Absentee ballots for the annual town election on April 10 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, April 9, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only: absence from the town during the hours the polls are open; physical disability and religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 10 to be counted.

MEET THE CANDIDATES

School Committee

Name: Stephanie B. Noble
Age: 44
Family: Husband, Howard C. Noble; children, Frannie 13, Lucy 7 and Julia 4
Address: 10 Joy Place
Years in town: 12 years
Occupation: Recently retired. Until Dec. 1998 was senior vice-president of merchandising, D.M. Management.
Education: B.A. Connecticut College
Civic/municipal experience: Leader of the youth group at Second Congregational Church for three years, softball coach.
Reason for seeking office: I am running for school committee to help strengthen the image of the Cohasset Public Schools. There is much to be proud of and we need to start focusing our energies on improving an already good school system and halting what has become "fashionable" criticism of our schools. During the next few months we must organize a grass roots effort to focus attention on the urgent need for state money to offset the spiraling costs of special education.

Discussion surrounding the renovation of the Deerhill and Middle-High School is also upon us. In a town with very limited financial resources we should have schools that are clean, in good repair and energy efficient. We do not need "state of the art" schools. Our faculty, school libraries and technology are wise investments for a strong system. Our buildings need attention but we must be conservative in our approach to renovation.

Stephanie B. Noble

Name: Betsy Connolly
Age: 47
Family: Husband, Edward; children, Caitlin 21, Megan 18 and Sean 13
Address: 1 Lily Pond Lane
Town: 24 years in Cohasset
Occupation: Education administrator
Education: B.A.-elementary and special education, St. Joseph's College, Conn. 1973; M.Ed.-learning disabilities and school administration, Bridgewater State College 1978; advanced graduate studies-education leadership, Bridgewater and the University of Massachusetts 1991-1995.
Civic experiences: Town Diversity Committee 1994-1999; METCO representative to the P.S.O. 1998-1999; School Committee Policy Review Committee 1998; Cohasset Middle/High School Council 1994-1998 (two years as co-chairperson); School Strategic Planning Committee since 1990; Cohasset Basketball and Lacrosse Boosters, 3 years; Cohasset Youth Resources Board of Directors Member 1993-1998; Appalachia Service Project, two years; Cohasset Community Center Board Member and Fundraiser, 4 years; C.C.D. teacher at St. Anthony's Church, 10 years.
Reasons for seeking office: The school committee has the responsibility of supporting and encouraging continued excellence in education for Cohasset schools. I am running for the one-year term on the Cohasset School Committee because I believe that I have the experience needed to be an effective member of the committee. As an educator and school administrator for 25 years in private and public school systems, I have an understanding of student, parent, staff and community needs.

Betsy Connolly

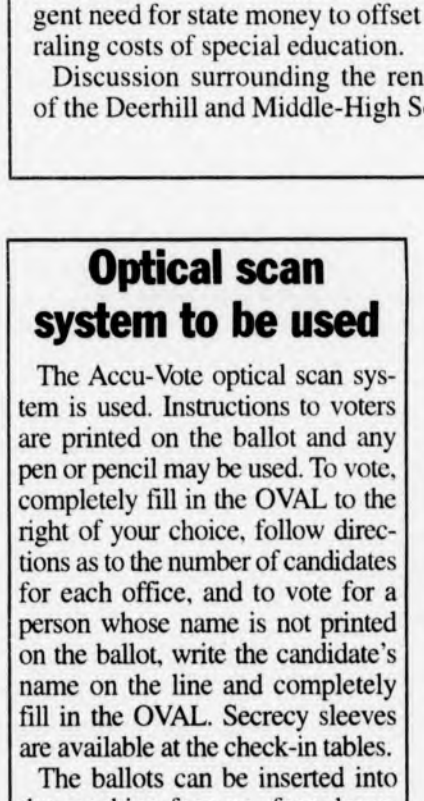
I have been involved in education reform and I know first hand the demands of curriculum frameworks. I have worked with the Massachusetts Teacher Association to share with representatives concerns related to financing education. There are several bills before the legislature that would provide much needed tax relief for all communities.

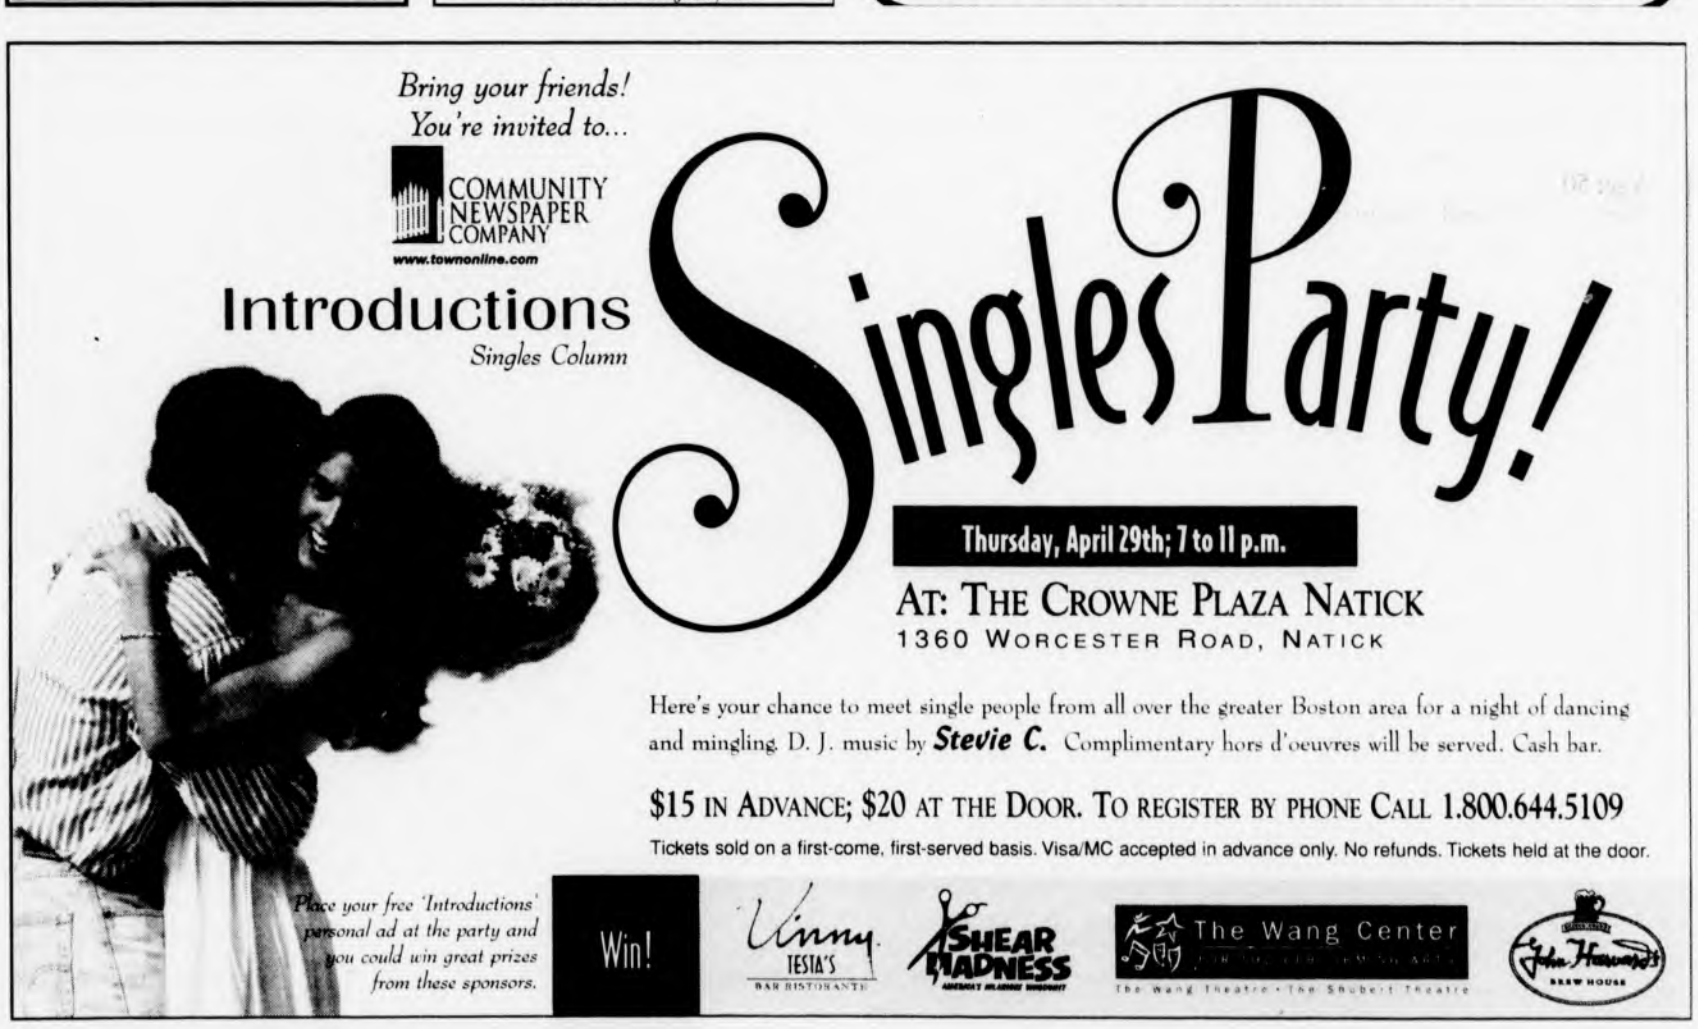
The school committee has worked diligently to curb costs for the town and at the same time bring us into the next millennium with a sense of pride. In the school budget for 1999-2000 teachers would receive a cost of living increase and/or step adjustment, $1,400 at the maximum for column 1 to $3,900 at the maximum Doctorate level IV, to bring their salaries closer to neighboring towns. I support our town budget and I hope you will too.

Optical scan system to be used

The Accu-Vote optical scan system is used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice, follow directions as to the number of candidates for each office, and to vote for a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, write the candidate's name on the line and completely fill in the OVAL. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables.

The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.





Zoning board unable to take action on Marina complaint

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Residents opposed to the expansion of the Cohasset Harbor Marina took their case to the zoning board of appeals on Monday night. Members of the appeals board expressed sympathy for the plight of residents living near the marina, but pointed out that they had no jurisdiction to conduct a formal hearing.

Victoria Hurley of Border Street led the charge against the owner of the marina, Paul Trendowicz. Hurley represented a group of 15 residents who signed an appeal protesting Building Inspector Robert Egan's alleged failure to enforce zoning bylaws governing the marina expansion. Hurley said the marina did not have adequate parking spaces or proper vehicular access as required by local zoning bylaws.

According to the complaint, the only access to the marina is over a triangular piece of property owned by the town. Additionally, the residents claim Trendowicz said the parking lot could hold 100 cars, although the zoning bylaws would permit only 41.

But members of the zoning board informed the residents that they had nothing to act upon.

"There has been no construction at all at the site, and the building inspector hasn't made any decisions either way," said zoning board Chairman Woody Chittick. "Nothing has happened. The parking lot has not been designed, so it's tough for the building inspector to render an opinion. We have seen no action and feel we have nothing to act on. We are an appeals board. Until he (Trendowicz) comes before us seeking an approval or unless he builds something, we have no jurisdiction."

Chittick said it appeared the residents wanted the zoning board to act on a feeling of anticipation that something might happen. He said it is important for the zoning board to proceed properly in case that matter ends up in court. Chittick added that even if the residents did have a legal appeal, they filed their complaint after the deadline for submission. Town bylaws require applicants to file all appeals within 30 days of the zoning enforcement officer's alleged failure to take appropriate action. The residents filed their appeal 41 days after Egan's alleged failure to move against the marina.

"Mr. Trendowicz should be wise enough not to invest in a lot of piers and have no access to them. We have to assume that before he needs the access, he will come and apply for a permit."
— Benjamin Lacey, zoning board

"Town counsel looked at the appeal period and it is 30 days," Chittick said. "But it took the applicant 41 days to file the appeal. The applicant has no legal grounds for an appeal."

Hurley complained that filing an appropriate appeal is a time-consuming process. She said someone at the town clerk's office told her that the appeal process did not include weekends. Hurley added that residents were having a difficult time receiving assistance from town officials.

"So many boards should have looked at this project and didn't," Hurley said. "We don't want things done and then have town boards telling us they should have done something earlier but it's too late now. We're afraid of after the fact occurrences."

Hurley said the residents are worried because Trendowicz has received permits from the Department of Environmental Protection, the Army Corps of Engineers, and the conservation commission. Trendowicz has already started dredging for the expansion. Hurley said residents are concerned Trendowicz will build piers and force the town to approve the land-based aspects of the project— parking and access — as the only sensible conclusion to the project.

Zoning board member Ben Lacy said Trendowicz would have to eventually submit plans showing where he intends to provide parking and access. Once those plans are submitted, Egan and the zoning board could take action, Lacy said.

"Mr. Trendowicz should be wise enough not to invest in a lot of piers and have no access to them," Lacy said. "We have to assume that before he needs the access, he will come and apply for a permit.

"If he is going to build a parking lot, then we have to assume that he will come to us at some point applying for a permit," he added.

The residents also complained that Trendowicz claimed he had all permits necessary to complete the project, and that Egan had signed off on one of the documents. Hurley said Trendowicz had given Egan a document showing some kind of parking arrangement.

Peter Pratt said he has talked with DEP and the Army Corps and they are under the impression that Trendowicz has all the land-based permits he needs to complete the project.

"That's just not the case," Pratt said. "The Army Corps says he has his permits, and the building inspector says he doesn't see any jurisdiction. We're asking you to compel the building inspector and the applicant to bring forth plans. This project is falling through the regulatory cracks."

Egan said his signature on a DEP Waterways Certificate does not constitute an approval of the project. He said his signature on that certificate states only that the marina is an allowed use.

"For anyone to say this allowed Mr. Trendowicz to build a parking lot is a stretch," Egan said. "I signed it, but I also made it clear to Mr. Trendowicz that he has to comply with parking regulations. He said he has adequate room for parking."

Egan said the parking issue is complex because the town's bylaws do not address marinas. Trendowicz is required to provide only adequate parking according to the bylaw. Egan said the bylaw requires 52 spaces and Trendowicz's sketch showed enough room to meet the requirement.

Trendowicz attended the meeting, but sat quietly through most of the discussion. He only questioned whether the meeting constituted a legal hearing. Chittick concluded the discussion by pointing out that the discussion could not be considered a formal hearing.

Lacy told the residents that their comments at the meeting could be heard clearly by Trendowicz, who sat alone in the front row.

USE IT OR LOSE IT

Recent research seems to bolster the old adage to either "use it or lose it." For instance, most health professionals no longer recommend bed rest for back problems, knowing it will likely only make matters worse. Back problems are better served by stretching/strengthening, range-of-motion exercises, and spinal adjustment. Similarly, it is now widely held that arthritic joints benefit more from appropriate exercise than from an avoidance of weight-bearing activity. By strengthening the muscles around their aching joints, patients can relieve much of the stresses that cause pain. This "use it or lose it" strategy has long been held by chiropractors, who can help older patients better deal with age-related conditions in the most natural and effective manner possible.

Growing older doesn't have to mean aches and pains . . . or having a hard time getting around. With good health, your aging years can be the most productive and enjoyable time of your life. A healthy back is strong, flexible, and pain-free. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we can help you with back problems. Our goal is to afford you with quality chiropractic health care to provide you with maximum health, comfort, and function in your activities of daily living, with a minimum of stress and discomfort. Residents challenge marina's legality

Selectmen and town manager challenged, too

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen's plans to discuss requesting from the Army Corps a moratorium on enforcing any encroachment of Cohasset Harbor Marina into federal anchorage for a year were temporarily moored by a group of residents opposed to the marina expansion.

The protesters met with the zoning board Monday night to discuss their concerns about the legality of CHM owner Paul Trendowicz's plans and reported back to selectmen on number of zoning violations they say they have uncovered at the marina.

The residents argued that the marina's current access from Parker Avenue is illegal because it is across a triangular section of land owned by the town. They said Trendowicz would have used that area for 100 cars, when the space they say that he is legally entitled to would only hold 41 vehicles. They also argued that the additional floats Trendowicz plans on adding to his marina would go beyond the light industry zone into a residential zone where bylaws say marinas are not allowed. They also cited a nonconforming trailer on the premises, as well as a lack of ADA-approved toilets on the site (Trendowicz needs four, but only has two).

They have launched a concerted effort to have all necessary town boards review the situation. Currently, Trendowicz has permits from the Army Corps of Engineers, the town conservation commission and the state Department of Environmental Protection. Dredging has also been completed.

They would like various town boards to review the site before Trendowicz actually begins construction on the floats that will add 38 boat slips to his current 47.

Victoria Hurley, 136 Border St., told selectmen that they were creating a legal quagmire for the town by allowing Trendowicz to go forward on his plans.

Hurley said that she had contacted Sen. Robert Hedlund's (R-Weymouth) office, and was told that if Trendowicz isn't stopped, he can continue putting money behind his plans and then turn around and sue the town for the money invested should the plan not pass muster with other town boards.

"You're looking at us as if we're the enemy, but we're just trying to help the town," she said.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris, Diane Sullivan and town manager Mark Haddad have been negotiating with Trendowicz to prevent possible litigation between CHM and the town. Selectmen had hoped that evening to discuss a solution so that pilings would not be needed for the Marina. They planned to contact the Army Corps of Engineers for a moratorium on CHM's encroachment into federal anchorage.

But Hurley told selectmen that while negotiating with them, Trendowicz had privately contacted the Army Corps in writing, requesting that town anchorage to be moved 10 feet to the south, and 10 feet north, away from the marsh, to allow for boats with motors.

"I believe there should be a moratorium on the project," said Christopher Julian, 14 Parker Ave, who held up a document containing the signature of 300 citizens in support of having the project "halted and scrutinized."

> "You're looking at us as if we're the enemy, but we're just trying to help the town."
> — Victoria Hurley, marina expansion opponent

Hurley said that she understood that checks have been accepted and cashed for slips promised for this season, which begins May 1. "The closer you get to May 1, the more difficult this will be," she said.

Selectman Merle Brown said that he would like the message sent to Trendowicz that he should stop.

"We should send that message to the building inspector, that Trendowicz must cease all further action until we've taken a closer look at this," he said.

Selectman Nan Roth said that in the interim, the docks should be put back as they were last year.

"We don't want to put him out of business," she said.

Accusations were hurled, such as that selectmen had broken the open meeting law by meeting with Trendowicz, and that Haddad had a private interest in the matter.

"We think now is the time to redress these violations," said Peter Pratt, 75 Ripley Road. "We need negotiations to stop on behalf of a private interest," he said, referring to Haddad.

"That last comment is unfair," reprimanded McMorris, who also reminded the group that "there has never been any intent to keep the public from this matter, which is why you were called personally to let you know that we were discussing this tonight."

Brown commended the group for finding the information, but chided them on their somewhat aggressive presentation.

"This is the first time I've heard any of this, and I'm gratified that you people were able to find things out. We're volunteers, like you are, but we have other issues to deal with and can't focus on just one that's of interest to you."

Haddad has followed up with town counsel.

"I submitted the issues they brought up at the meeting to town counsel and he will get back to me on them," he said. "Whether or not what they're saying is true, I don't know. I was accused of being a supporter of a private interest, which isn't true, and it was very insulting. But I did speak with town counsel and he will see if we violated any meeting laws, zoning requirements and things like that."

Chart House to take on Eclectic Dining style

"They intend to really use both premises as an associated building."

Humphreys described plans for a casual outdoor area for people at the Chowder House, that would operate during the daytime hours and would have six-foot, glass-fenced outdoor seating area.

The addition would have eight parking spaces and no less than 24 seats with a handicap access ramp, as well as five parking spaces for the take-out area, Humphreys said.

Valet parking will also be available, through the back parking lot of Kimballs on Elm Street.

"I'm not saying that there won't be a parking problem, as there always has been, but we can valet 30 to 60 cars across the street," said Humphreys. "It's not perfect, but it doesn't violate zoning laws, and it is the parking situation that limits us ultimately."

Selectman Thomas Callahan inquired if Roy's lot on Margin Street was bought as a solution to the problem.

"It's a residential lot and I'm not going to tell you it wasn't purchased with a view to that," said Humphreys. "It's an extremely dangerous area there, so if parking variance would be approved for, we'd allow public parking there to get some parking off the street."

Humphreys wanted the liquor rights to the Atlantica restaurant to extend to the additional building, so that eat-in customers could enjoy alcohol and waterfront ambience while on the premises, including at the outdoor tables. The inside area of the Chowder House would hold 40, but the outside patio area would accommodate up to 120 patrons.

Architect Jim Shipsky worked on the model for the Olde Salt House.

"The intention is to create a lovely outdoor waterfront place where people can enjoy a snack and a beverage," said Shipsky. "The main design element is the trees that I intend to plant there, once I find a type large enough, yet young enough to survive acclimation to salt water on its roots twice a day."

Shipsky had wanted to raise the outdoor eating platform by a foot and half from the existing asphalt to get the tree roots that much above the salt water, but the Cohasset Conservation Trust still has jurisdiction over changes to the property. The Trust objected to the proposed raised and fenced-in area because it would block views to the harbor from passers-by.

Shipsky said that the outdoor eating area behind the Chowder House follows an architectural design pattern called "Tree Place," which places trees in such a way that when you're under them, you feel as though you're in a place that's created by the trees themselves.

"That's my design goal," Shipsky said. "I've heard a good deal of support for a less-than-formal place on the waterfront where people can have a snack and a beverage. People seem to feel there's a need for that, and maybe this will be the place."

Getting the two eateries into the type of establishment Roy envisions will ultimately require permission of several town boards so that the Olde Salt House can be made into a 25 percent kitchen and 75 percent sit-down place.

"We want it to be an after-the-beach, come-in-your-flip-flops kind of place," explained Nee about the proposed addition to Atlantica. "It will be a place where people can stop by for fried clams, a salad or maybe just ice cream."

Nee, a Boston resident, is was last a chef and instructor at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts, form which he graduated in 1990 and received the First Annual Julia Child Award. He has consistently worked in the restaurant industry, and began his career in Hingham as a waiter about 25 years ago at Country Fair, now Siros. "People probably wouldn't recognize me from then, since I look so much younger now," he joked.

As head chef, Stanfors will create the culinary style he had planned on while manager—"New England classics" with a fresh presentation of lighter, healthier ingredients and seasoning. Light meals will be available in the bar area, where customers will be able to order oysters on the half-shell and shrimp cocktails while looking out at the water.

The nautical theme of the restaurant carries into the white and blue china, with its painted blue fish (with golden gills on the fancier dining settings); maple fish adorn the front desk and octagonal bar's teak corners; and the white windows treatments designed by Dorothy Adams are trimmed with a blue fish pattern. The Italian tile floors, ivory and sandstone upholstered chairs and the Sambonet silverware are the main changes to the restaurant's interior, which still has seating that offers water views to all diners.

The reopening of the harbor-side restaurant is good news to downtown businesses who had benefited from the out-of-town visitors that attended wedding parties there or came in for the restaurant itself.

Dean Rizzo, chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, is keen on Atlantica's emergence on the waterfront.

"I think it will be a tremendous boost to the village business district and a great asset to the town," he said. "I was happy to see that selectmen granted the dual liquor license and connection of the two buildings. A dining place where people can enjoy the harbor, as well as a good meal and a drink, has been a missing ingredient to the harbor. With its extra capacity for functions, I think it will attract more people from surrounding areas and we hope that will help revitalize the village."

Domenic Micarelli, president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, agrees.

"I'm very much pro-business and am excited about the idea of having the new restaurant which will definitely help the village and harbor," he said. "That building has been an institution for a long, long time and maybe it can pick up where Hugo's left off. So many people have memories connected with that place, and we still get calls from people all over the state about Hugo's, where their parents got married. It was a landmark."

Atlantica won't open to the public for over a month, but interest is already high.

"We have over 50 functions booked for '99 and we haven't even served one meal," said Nee. "What I keep hearing from the people who want to hold an event here is that there aren't a lot of places on the South Shore that have the facilities for a large event like a wedding. Given the casual theme in conjunction with fine dining, we intend to exceed the expectations of this and surrounding towns , and at a reasonable price."

"Peter wants this to be a credit to himself and the town," said Humphreys. "There is a lot of thought that's gone into this and it appears to be a sound, controllable plan."

COHASSET SPORTS

Girls lax is close, but falls short

The Cohasset High School girls' lacrosse team opened its 1999 home season on March 31, playing a talented Barnstable squad even for most of the game before falling 12-10 to the Red Raiders.

"We really opened the field up today with our passing," said first-year coach Kate Brady after the contest. "The girls are going good, and learning to control the game."

Cohasset's offense was led by co-captain Megan Connolly, who had five goals, and junior Jenny Chastain, who scored three times. The defense was anchored by junior Jackie Kahn, a Bay State Games gold medalist, who also scored once.

Strong defensive efforts were also turned in by senior co-captain Caitlin O'Neill and juniors Emily Libby and Caitlin Stansell. Sophomore goalie Clara Sceery was outstanding, recording 20 saves.

"The freshmen are great to have," said coach Brady, "and I'm really proud of the way our upper classmen are working with them, and making them feel a part of the team."

The Cohasset girls opened their season on March 29, traveling to Martha's Vineyard, where they were edged 11-8, after tying the Vineyarders at 4-4 at halftime. Four Cohasset players — Carolyn Cameron, Jenny Chastain, Megan Connolly and Jackie Kahn — had two goals apiece, and Clara Sceery had another outstanding game in goal.

The Lady Skippers travel to Marshfield today (Thursday), and then host Martha's Vineyard at home on Tuesday, the 13th, in a rematch.

Skippers improve by leaps and bounds

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High track team just wanted to compete. Knowing that powerhouse Rockland had limited the Abington boys just 13 points, and that the girls lost by single digits, the Skippers knew that to be able to stay close would speak volumes about their progress.

The girls team did more than hold its own against the Bulldogs, coming up with a 70-66 win. While the boys lost, they still managed to rack up some points in a 90-46 loss.

"Rockland is a senior-laden team," said Cohasset boys coach Tom Hughes. "They are just a powerhouse. They held Abington, another senior-laden team, to just 13 points. We're mostly freshmen and sophomores. We're young, but there's a lot of talent. I'm very happy that we were able to get 46 points, and I can't believe the girls won."

Ashley Ulmer took first in the high jump with a leap of 4'8, followed by Morgan Hurley's 4'6. In the hurdles, Hurley took first with a time of time of 53.2. Maureen Equi was second in 54.2. The 4x100 relay team of Tamara DeVaughn, Kerry McCarthy, Maura Duffy and Kathleen McCarthy took first with a time of 57.6.

"The girls have been doing well," said Cohasset girls coach Al LaFountain. "They're low in numbers, so the quantity isn't there, but the quality certainly is. We have a lot of freshmen that have been competing well."

The boys team got state qualifying performances from several athletes. Brian Krupczek was a triple winner in the 200, the triple jump and the 4x100 relay team. Also on the relay team were Craig Parker, Khalil Madyun and Dan Trowers, who also won the high jump and the long jump. Peter Maitland won the 800.

"We had six athletes go to states last year," said Hughes. "I think in about three weeks we might have as many as 14 qualifying. This is our third year with the new track.. It's like the movie, Field Of Dreams. 'If you build, they will come.' It was built and the numbers have gone up since."

The Rockland girls 4x400 team won the last, and perhaps most exciting race of the day.

"The final scores weren't in yet and we thought that if we won that race that we could maybe take the meet," said Rockland girls coach Peter Woodward..

Cohasset led through the first three legs and had built up a significant lead going into the last leg, but eighth grader Didi Walker ran a sensational anchor leg to lead the Bulldogs to a win in the event, but it was not enough to take the meet.

"We've had som many close losses in the last two years," said Woodward. "It would be nice to come out on top for once."

Hull also competed in the tri-meet, but was swept by both Rockland and Cohassett.

The Skippers next home meet will be Monday, April 19.

RECREATION NEWS

Annual MS Walk will make a million-dollar difference

Thousands of friends and neighbors will be walking to make a million-dollar difference in the fight against multiple sclerosis.

The Cohasset MS Walk begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 17 at Cohasset Town Hall. The 10K Cohasset MS Walk, sponsored by the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, is one of the 26 walks across Massachusetts and New Hampshire united by one goal — to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system with life-long physical and emotional effects.

MS Walk participants raise funds to support research, education, and advocacy that enhance the quality of life for 10,000 people with MS and their families throughout Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

To register for the MS walk, call 800-493-WALK or visit the web site at www.mswalks.org. The 1999 MS Walk is presented by USTrust with the support of WCVB-TV's Health-Beat Project.

Every hour of every day another person in the United States is diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. MS affects a third of a million people nationwide. Most people with multiple sclerosis are diagnosed in the prime of life, between the ages of 20 and 40. MS is a particularly difficult disease because of its uncertainty. Symptoms may be mild, such as numbness in the limbs or severe paralysis or loss of vision. The progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted, but advances in research and treatment are giving hope to those affected by the disease.

For more than 50 years the National Multiple Sclerosis Society has provided hope and help for people with MS across the nation. The society supports more research and serves more people with MS than any national voluntary organization in the world. The Central New England Chapter provides a variety of education, advocacy, and support programs for people with MS and their families in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Jami Butman is awarded a Teen Anti-Drug Lifetime Leadership Scholarship by Plymouth County District Attorney Michael Sullivan and state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund.

Cohasset scholarship award winner

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced that Jami Butman of Cohasset has been awarded a Teen Anti-Drug Lifetime Leadership (T.A.L.L.) Scholarship by the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs (GAAD).

The scholarship, in the amount of $1,000, is awarded to individuals who have demonstrated leadership qualities, initiative and responsibility in the fight against drugs. Of the more than 100 applicants, 10 students were chosen to receive $1,000 regional scholarships, and one student will be chosen to receive a $2,000 state-wide scholarship for exceptional achievements on the anti-drug front.

"I congratulate both the T.A.L.L. Scholarship award winners and nominees for their dedicated efforts in the fight against drugs and alcohol," Hedlund said. "It is great to see individuals, such as Jami, serving as positive role models to other youth and adults alike."

April vacation art series

The Children's Creativity Workshops is offering a new hand-on art activity for April vacation. Boys and girls ages 6 to 12 years old may participate in "Stories of Clay." Each student will sculpt their story ideas with colored clays and create a miniature environment. The workshops meet for three consecutive days Mon., April 19 to Wed., April 21 for one and one-half hours.

Arts Boosters thank students and volunteers

By Donna O'Donnell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The CHS Arts Boosters would like to congratulate the high school students, who participated in this winter's "Cabaret," which was held at Kimball's-By-The-Sea. This event has become an annual treat and this year was no exception. Mr. Marks, Cohasset High School's choral music teacher, directed the senior chorus and acted as emcee for the individual performers. This venue allows the students to showcase their talents in a small cabaret setting in the lovely dining room at Kimball's. It is also one of the annual fundraisers for the Arts Boosters.

Special thanks are sent to the following people who helped with this year's "Cabaret." Susan Pile, as chairman of the event, did a superb job in organizing the night. This is Susan's last year with Arts Boosters as her son, Hunt, will be graduating in June. Susan has been an invaluable help, especially with this annual event. Susan was helped by Terese D'Urso, Olga Nohe, Debbie Krupczak and Lee Jenkins. Many thanks to these generous people for their participation.

The Arts Boosters would also like to thank the following people and organizations for their financial support this year: The Afshar Family, Paula and David Buick, The Candia Family, Linda DeRosa Coakley and Richard Coakley, The Collins-Wooley Family, Betsy and Ed Connolly, Cynthia and James Dedes, Don and Susan DeMichele, Dayle Dickinson and Robert O'Hayre, Nino and Terese D'Urso, Kathy and David Gray, The Kinchla Family, Linda and Andy Krueger, Debbie and Paul Krupczak, The Lovallo Family, the Low Family, the McMorris Family, George and Myrna Moje, the Nicynski Family, the Niessink Family, Stephanie and Howard Noble, Emmett and Susan O'Brien, the O'Donnell Family, Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah F. O'Sullivan, Mary and Peter Parker, Ken and JoAnn Pilczak, Susan and Wilson Pile, Colin and Brenda Regan, James and Susan Ross, Charles and Andrea Santoro, Rick and Gitte Shea, Mary and Michael Sullivan, Anne and Gary Vanderweil, Jeff and Ellie Waal, Clay Strokes and the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

Our next event will be Pops Night, which will be held at the High School May 12. Mark your calendars to come and check out the talent at CHS!

Social Service League scholarship

The Social Service League of Cohasset is accepting applications for a $2,000 scholarship being offered to any Cohasset resident furthering his or her education in the medical or social work fields. Application forms are available from the Social Service League office, 16 Highland Ave., weekdays between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. or in the Cohasset High School Guidance Office. Applications must be returned by April 9. For more information, call 383-0771.

Kitchen tour a hot ticket

Though ticket sales for the 1999 South Shore Community Center Kitchen Tour have been brisk, a limited number of tickets remain available for this designer tour of five distinctive and festively decorated Cohasset kitchens and dining rooms set for April 9 from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

As in past years, each of this year's homes will spotlight formal and informal tablescapes by area interior designers, or the homeowners themselves, as well as tempting taste treats by some of the South Shore's finest caterers.

Starting at the Lightkeeper's Residence, which will serve as both respite spot and marketplace, the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and common. Tour highlights include two recently renovated Georgian Colonials, a completely updated 1950s ranch, and a turn-of-the-century Victorian charmer.

Tickets may be purchased at the center or by calling (781) 383-0088. Tickets are $25 per person (while available) throughout the day of the tour. In addition to tour admission, each ticket offers the holder the chance to win one of five gourmet gift baskets donated by A Matter of Taste of Scituate. Additional chances on the baskets may be purchased for $1 a chance or six chances for $5. The specially designed baskets will be displayed, one at each home, throughout the day of the tour.

Funds from the 1999 Kitchen Tour will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center.

Dramatic Club musical

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents the musical "Anne of Green Gables" at the Cohasset Town Hall weekends from May 2-16. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Front Street Books in Scituate or reserved by phone at (781) 545-5499. Local artist Donna Green will be on hand May 2 to sign copies of her "Anne of Green Gables" Journal.

Adult swing dance lessons

Registrations are currently being accepted at the recreation office for beginner adult swing dance lessons, beginning May 13, to be taught by Raquelles Institute of Dance and Fitness.

Class will be held each Thursday evening, from 8:15 to 9 p.m., at the Raquelle Dance Studio, Jonathan Livingston Square, Route 3A in Cohasset. The fee for the six-week session is $35 per person.

You may register at the Cohasset Recreation Office, 1st floor, Town Hall. Forms and checks payable to: Town of Cohasset, must be returned to the recreation office. For more information, call the recreation office at 383-4109.

'An Evening at the Manor'

A most dramatic and exciting evening is on the horizon for the South Shore concert audience, as the Unicorn Singers announce a special event to celebrate their 20th anniversary.

On Saturday and Sunday evenings, April 24 and 25, Upper Weld Hall at St. John's Church in Hingham will be transformed into the grand hall at Weld Manor. The public is invited to join Lord Richard, Lady Jeanne and the wandering tinkers, singing wenches, and court dancers of the Manor for a Publick Entertainment of song, dance and general merriment. A variety of delectable foods and beverages await the guests who are invited to "lift their voices in song, their tankards in drink and their heels in dance!"

During the second portion of the entertainment, the audience will enjoy an enchanting and nostalgic performance of Menotti's "The Unicorn, the Gorgon and the Manticore." This unusual madrigal ballet, fully staged by the Unicorn Singers in '79 and '89, will be sung live as the audience receives a visual glimpse of the past via video — see what the singers looked like back then as they sing for you now!

Tables of eight and six are available via a full color brochure describing seating options and prices. You can even elect to be guests of the royal family at the baronial center banquet table! Creative dress for guests is encouraged to add a further dimension to this unique event; suggestions will be mailed with your tickets. Please call now for your invitation to "An Evening at the Manor" at (781) 749-6561.

Legislation could be financial boon for Cohasset

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset needs money, and the selectmen are examining any plan that might provide the town with even a few extra dollars. One plan that town officials are supporting is proposed state legislation that would give small, local contractors more opportunities to bid on medium-sized projects. The proposed Construction Reform Legislation, if passed, would also give general contractors more leeway to choose their own team of sub-contractors.

The proposed legislation would cover a wide range of issues, but changes in the bidding procedure for public works projects would benefit small towns the most. The legislation that stands to benefit Cohasset the most would raise from $10,000 to $50,000 the minimum threshold for obtaining formal bids on public works projects. Currently, towns only have to obtain three quotes from contractors for projects which cost less than $10,000. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he just picks up the telephone and gets quotes from three contractors. The legislation would extend that process to projects up to $50,000. Projects more expensive than $50,000 would require formal, sealed bids with the lowest bidder winning approval.

"This legislation would help small towns."
— Selectman Merle Brown

The new $50,000 threshold would give small, local contractors more opportunities to work on public works projects in their communities. Selectman Merle Brown is a strong supporter of the legislation.

"This legislation would help small towns," Brown said. "We wouldn't have to pay the prevailing wage as frequently as we do now. This would allow us to go to the small, local guy who can give us a better price but can't pay prevailing wage. The legislation could also benefit local public building construction projects.

Changes in bidding on larger building projects could also benefit Cohasset. Currently, towns proposing public building construction projects valued at more than $25,000 must obtain competitive sub-bids for work not performed by the primary contractor. The general contractor is forced to use sub-bidders from a list of companies that have received approval from the state. The new legislation would raise the minimum threshold for mandatory competitive sub-bids to $250,000. The new threshold would apply to the construction, reconstruction, demolition, maintenance or repair of any building by a public agency.

"This part of the legislation gives communities the ability to pick one general contractor to do all the work," said Rosemarie Day, Assistant Secretary of the Executive Offices of Administration and Finance. "This would provide general contractors with more opportunity to choose their own team of sub-bidders. It could also result in less finger-pointing from contractors dissatisfied with the work of a sub-bidder that he didn't want to work with."

Many large building construction projects require bids from sub-trade contractors that specialize in one aspect of construction. Sub-trades include roofing and flashing, metal windows, tile, plumbing, elevators, masonry and a variety of other trades. The proposed legislation would raise from $10,000 to $100,000 the threshold for obtaining competitive sub-trade bids on public building construction projects. Sub-trade work valued at less than $100,000 would be included in the overall general contractor's bid. This provision would give contractors more latitude to work with familiar sub-contractors or to avoid companies with poor reputations.

The components of the legislation that would benefit towns like Cohasset are actually minor components of the proposal. The main portion of the legislation would allow state agencies to award construction contracts in some cases to companies that are not the lowest bidders. A second major component would eliminate a current provision that requires two architects on state building projects.

Day said the legislation is scheduled to be filed with the Legislature as early as next week. She said the only opponents to the legislation thus far have been sub-contractors associations.

"They're not wild about this legislation," Day said.

Bids sought for water main rehabilitation

The Water Commissioners voted April 1 to seek bids for the rehabilitation of water mains on eight streets in Cohasset. The request for bids will be issued soon, and the bids are planned to be opened on April 29.

"These water system improvements will increase water flow both on the specific streets being rehabilitated, and will help improve water service to the water distribution system as a whole," said Commissioner Chairman Rob Kasameyer.

The Water Commission will be replacing old and undersized water mains with new, larger water mains on portions of the following streets: Scofield Road, Ripley Road, Norman Todd Road, Cushing Road, Spring St., Smith Place, Church St., and part of King St (between Rte. 3A and North Main St.).

Kasameyer pointed out that these water system improvements are called for in the Water Department's long-range capital improvements plan that was designed for the Water Commission by Tutela Engineering in 1996. The plan was developed after the Water Commission solved the 1994-1995 water supply crisis by building a new water main on Forest Avenue and replacing a water main on Beechwood St.

The Commissioners also voted to schedule a vote on their May 13 meeting to consider whether to take land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain for the second water storage tank also called for in the plan.

Funds for this project was authorized at the October 26, 1998 special town meeting and the March 27, 1999 annual town meeting.

Cohasset gets more than $3K in cultural grants

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray announced the awarding of grants totaling $3,270 to the local Cultural Council in Cohasset. The grants were awarded from a pool of funds distributed to the Local Councils by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, a state agency that supports public programs and educational activities in the arts, sciences and humanities.

The Cohasset Cultural Council is part of a grassroots network of 335 councils serving every city and town in the state. The state legislature provides an annual appropriation to the Massachusetts Cultural Council, which then allocates funds to each local council. The decisions about which activities to support are made at the community level, by a board of municipally appointed volunteers.

The Members of the Cohasset Local Council are as follows: Nancy Connolly, Mary Foley, Florence Jerome, David Lehr, Shirley Tewksbury and Michael Westcott

Statewide, more than $4.2 million will be distributed by local cultural councils in 1999 — more than 7,000 grants in all.

This year's grants for Cohasset include:

Bridgewater Antiphonal Brass Society, for a concert performance of various types of music, $290.

The Choral Art Society, Inc., for subsidized tickets for the various choral concerts, $350.

Cohasset Elder Affairs, for a Mother's Day tea with first lady Abigail Adams, $200.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a storytelling performance with masks by Michael Cooper, $200.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a Tribal Rhythms celebration, $200.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a Plymouth plantation outreach program, $150.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a science education program about owls, $100.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a presentation about famed Olympic runner Wilma Rudolph, $100.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a presentation on writing techniques by author Barbara O'Connor, $100.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a presentation by actors from the Paul Revere House, $100.

Cohasset Parent School Organization, for a presentation by staff from the Tsongas Industrial History Center, $50.

Duxbury Art Association, for a 25th annual Winter juried show, $100.

Island Grove Chorus, for vocal coaching for chorus members, $100.

Metco/Diversity Committee of Cohasset PSO, for a community festival celebrating diversity with different performers, $400.

North River Arts Society, for a festival of the arts family entertainment, $80.

South Shore Art Center, for a 1999 Festival on the common with various art exhibitions.

OBITUARIES

Mabel S. McWilliams

Mabel S. McWilliams (Backlund), 88, died March 22 at the Colonial Nursing and Rehabilitation Center, Weymouth.

Born in Alderney Channel Islands, England, Mrs. McWilliams lived in Cohasset for 70 years.

Wife of the late George R. McWilliams, Mrs. McWilliams leaves a daughter, Linda Farrag of Cohasset; four brothers, Ernest, Alfred, Roland and Sigfred Backlund, and a grandson, David Farrag of Cohasset.

Mrs. McWilliams was a member of Senior Citizens and an active member of St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset.

A funeral Mass was held at St. Anthony's Church.

Interment was in Woodside Cemetery.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset handled the arrangements.

Sally Anne Lincoln

Sally Anne (Magee) Lincoln, age 56, a Hingham resident since 1962, died at her home on Sunday, [illegible] after a long illness. Mrs. Lincoln was born in Weymouth. She was raised and educated in Norwell, graduating from Norwell High School. For the past 15 years she has been the Assistant Treasurer in the Town of Cohasset.

She leaves her husband, Donald W. Lincoln of Hingham and three sons; Donald C. Lincoln of West Newbury, Brian D. Lincoln of Salisbury and Kevin A. Lincoln of Plymouth NH. Daughter of Stanford Magee of Weymouth and the late Virginia (Worcester) Magee. Sister of Kenneth Magee of Auburn, CA. Also survived by four grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday, April 7, at 1 p.m. at the South Shore Baptist Church, 578 Main St. (Rte. 228), Hingham. Arrangements were made by the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel, 21 Pond St., Hingham.

Interment will be in the High Street Cemetery, Hingham.

Rather than flowers, donations in her memory would be preferred to the Bare Cove Fire Museum, P.O. Box 262, Hingham, MA. 02043.

Voters label override a loser

Selectmen meet on budget tonight

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The $766K override to balance the town and school budgets went down in flames on Saturday in a 1368 to 944 vote.

The defeat of the override will require quick strategizing by town manager Mark Haddad and other town and school officials.

"Prop. 2 1/2 was voted in for a reason, and we have to live under those terms."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Voters who readily approved the override at town meeting two weeks ago may not have been representative of a good cross section of the town, given that the turnout for last Saturday's election was nearly half of the 5,000 registered voters or 2,330.

The negative results have left Haddad disappointed, but ready to meet voters' demands.

Deficit overshadows annual town election

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Some candidates might want a recount of Saturday's votes, now that they're taking seats on their respective boards in the midst of a failed $766K override.

"I think the selectmen have a lot of challenges ahead," said Nan Roth, who lost her seat on the board of selectmen to Fred Koed who ran a vigorous campaign, raising $5,000.

"I think the magnitude of the override defeat was surprising to everyone," she said in a phone interview this week. "It really reflects a desire for the citizens in Cohasset to not increase taxes. But I think it's going to put severe strains on town government and I don't know if selectmen will cut all of it or come back with a lower override. I think either way, with a re-

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Itemization of water bills

Town manager Mark Haddad requested that water commissioners format water bills to include previous balances and payments on the water bills.

Haddad sent a memo to the water commissioners, writing that selectmen thought it would be helpful to residents if previous balances and payments can appear on subsequent bills.

Currently, bills show the amount owed for the present water service.

Clay Strokes requests 'BYOB'

Clay Strokes owner Kelly Kalus requested approval from town manager Mark Haddad and selectmen for a "BYOB" in her Cohasset Village business at 21 South Main St., where she plans to hold reserved Ladies Night Out and Couple/Date Night parties for adults over the age of 21 only after her regular studio hours of 12 to 5:30 p.m.

Kalus asked Haddad to let her know if her patrons could bring and serve their own drinks, and if there were any other requirements involved for licensing.

Endorsed for Historic District Commission

Marjorie Hovorka, 38 Lantern Lane, comes highly recommended to fill the Historic District Commission seat vacated by Mary Hartshorne.

Historic District chairman Richard Horn wrote town manager Mark Haddad about his interview with Hovorka, in which he discovered her interest in preservation and her past residency in Lexington, where she lived in a district similar to Cohasset.

"I have concluded that she will make an outstanding member and have suggested the same in a poll I conducted with some of the Commission members," he wrote.

Police officers named

Police Chief Brian Noonan recommended for appointment as seasonal police officers for the 1999 summer season: James P. McLean, Boston; Richard Novio, Rockland; Sasha A. Geddes, Cohasset; Brian E. Curren, Cohasset.

Appointments are conditional offers of employment contingent upon the successful passing of, and the certification of a physician that the candidates meet the required physical fitness standards. Applicants are required to successfully complete Firearms training and qualification, CPR and First aid as well as orientation training through our department. The hours and days of the week that these individuals shall be employed have yet to be determined, Noonan said.

All applicants will have completed, at a minimum, the required Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council Reserve Intermittent Police Officers' Training Course.

National Library Week proclaimed

Last week, selectman Nan Roth made a motion in favor of a request from the Library Trustees to have the week of April 11-17 declared National Library Week.

Merle Brown seconded the motion.

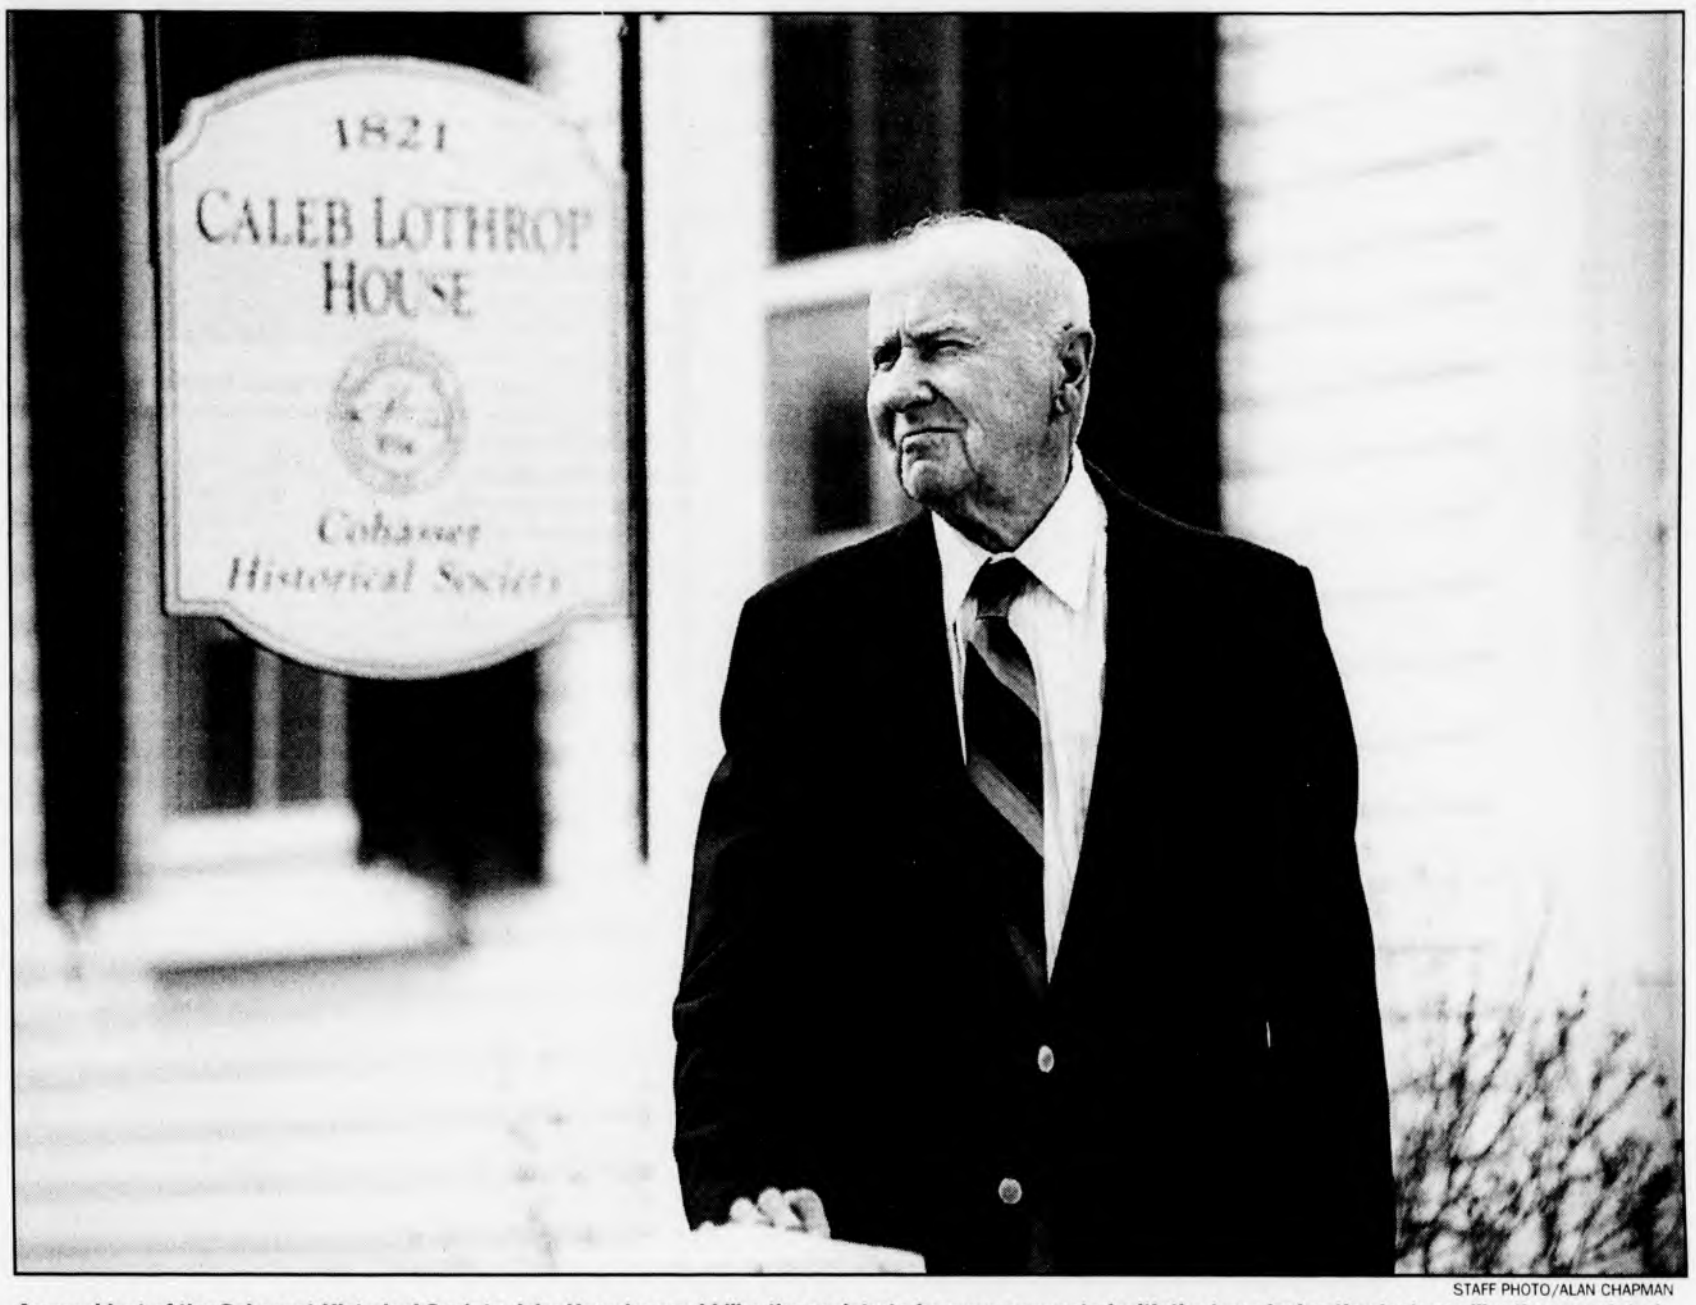
'Newcomer' at helm of historical society

Energetic septuagenarian wants group to branch out

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER



STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN

As president of the Cohasset Historical Society, John Hovorka would like the society to be more connected with the town by hosting lectures like the one slated for April 25 at Kimball's.

At first, one might think John Hovorka's family goes back generations in town.

It's a fair assumption about the Lantern Lane resident, who sits at the helm of the venerable Cohasset Historical Society. But Hovorka is a virtual newcomer having moved to Cohasset in May of 1994 with his wife, Marjorie.

That being said, however, it doesn't take long to see why the historical society snapped Hovorka up and elected him president last November.

"People treat me as if I were very lively," he says. "I can't see myself that way. I'm 77 years old and by that time, you just look in the mirror and say, 'that's it.'"

Hovorka holds undergraduate and graduate degrees in physics from Queens College of New York City and the University of Illinois respectively, and a doctorate in engineering from MIT.

"I'm over qualified," he says with a smile.

But despite being firmly rooted in science — including heading the science division at Curry College for 12 years until he retired five years ago — Hovorka readily admits to a deep love of history.

"I read a lot," he says. "So I wind up talking with people who read and I meet history buffs."

In the fall, Hovorka will teach a seminar on American Architectural History at the Harvard Institute on Learning in Retirement. His past seminars have covered topics such as American Intellectual History, Technology and Culture, and Comparing American Society in the 20s and 70s after World War I and Vietnam.

"Cohasset's history was of immediate interest to me," Hovorka recalled. So shortly after moving in, he got a hold of Bigelow's history of Cohasset.

He soon joined the 350-member historical society. Last year he was named to the board or directors who nominated him for president after only three months on the board.

While the focus of the historical society is maintaining its buildings the Caleb Lothrop House, John Wilson House and Maritime Museum, and the maintenance and care of its collections — Hovorka wants to branch out.

"On my watch, I'm also concerned with communicating with other historical societies," he says. "I've joined the Scituate society to see what cooks there."

He penned his first "Letter from the President" in this quarter's historical society newsletter about colleges that offer programs in historic preservation and museumship. Future missives, Hovorka plans for the newsletter, will focus on the relationship between historical preservation and quality of life in this community and how a historically rich community is support for real estate prices.

As it turns out, Cohasset almost missed having the Hovorkas in its midst.

They looked in Hingham but couldn't find the kind of house they were looking for. Hovorka quickly points out his Cohasset house was built in 1970 and at this time of his life, he relishes being in a home that requires much less work than the 17th century house he left in Milton.

Although he's left the days of owning an antique home behind, Hovorka — who is a member of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities and the Bostonian Society — can't overstate the importance of a community's sense of history.

"The effect on a child of having a bunch of old houses around can be very profound."
— John Hovorka,
Cohasset Historical Society president

"The effect on a child of having a bunch of old houses around can be very profound," he says.

Hovorka said a goal of the society this year is to provide more significant activities for its membership.

He says the society has not connected with the town through lectures.

To that end, the society will host a lecture on the history of Paragon Park with a dinner at the Kimballs on April 25.

Hovorka hopes the village task force will work with the historical society in enhancing the village. He says ambiance of a town is important whether the resident lives in a ranch house or Federal-style like the Lothrop House.

"The residents here are concerned with quality of life," he says. "They draw the line between standard of living which is just stuff and quality of life which is much more than that."

The Cohasset Historical Society's spring dinner and lecture will be held at Kimball's by the sea April 25. The social hour will begin at 5:30 with dinner at 6 p.m.

The speaker is Richard Cleverly, president of the Hull Historical Society. His subject, "A Visual History of Hull from Civil War through the 1930s." Cleverly's rare slides will give you a glimpse of the grandeur of Nantasket at the turn of the century. See the amazing beach front hotels and elaborate entertainment facilities that filled Nantasket beach and drew crowds from far and wide as they arrived on a railroad designed especially to serve Hull. Those who have seen his presentation are impressed by the depth of his knowledge and his insights into Hull history.

Program and dinner $20 for members, $22 for non members. Choice of chicken or scrod. Reservations should be sent by April 17 to Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, 02025. Information only at the society, 383-1434, or John Hovorka, president of the society, 383-0766.

Multi-board powwow planned for marina conflict

Planners seek clarification on parking

Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The group of residents who visited several Cohasset boards last week — bringing with them an extensive list of alleged violations by Cohasset Harbor Marina owner Paul Trendowicz — has prompted the planning board to call for a multi-board meeting on the complicated issues relating to the expansion of the marina.

This follows on the heels of a planning board meeting last week during which the group — many of whom are neighbors to the marina on Parker Avenue — heatedly voiced concern about the project which will about double the number of boat slips in Bailey's Creek.

The meeting is tentatively set for 8 p.m., April 28 or May 8, and should include selectmen, the zoning board of appeals and the harbor study committee. Copies of the memo requesting the meeting were also sent to marina owner Paul Trendowicz, building inspector Bob Egan and Victoria Hurley, spokeswoman for the group opposed to expansion of the marina.

"We're calling the meeting so we can all get on the same page," Moore said about the boards involved.

In the meantime, the planning board has also asked town counsel to clarify whether or not the site plan review process covers a "dock". Under the town by-laws, a structure expanded by 200 square feet triggers a site plan review that includes examining the amount of parking. That means that if Trendowicz expanded a building on the site by 200 square feet, he would need to go before the planning board for approval but it's not clear if docks qualify.

"We're calling the meeting so we can all get on the same page."
— Planning board chairman
Al Moore

"With additional slips, there needs to be someplace to park," Moore said. "Where will the overflow go?"

"For example, when the golf driving range went up on Rt. 3A, they built a shack that was 195 square feet, so the parking did not go before the planning board," Moore explained. "There was enough parking, but had there not been, it would have slipped through that loophole. If the driving range had only had two spaces, it wouldn't have stopped it from being built."

Last week selectmen had hoped to put a halt on Trendowicz's plans to install pilings to anchor his docks by asking the Army Corps for a year's moratorium on taking enforcement action on the marina's encroachment into federal waters. Docks secured by bottom anchors rather than pilings would provide too much swing, pushing the parked boats into the federal anchorage area. Pilings are considered less desirable from an aesthetic standpoint.

But plans for the moratorium were put on hold after selectmen's and zoning board of appeals meetings where the same group of angry residents claimed the marina did not have adequate parking spaces or proper vehicular access as required by the town's zoning by-laws.

The access is over a piece of triangular-shaped, town-owned land at the end of Parker Avenue.

"While the town shouldn't wall it up with geraniums, Trendowicz shouldn't be able to use it," Moore said. "He may have to move his entrance."

Planning board members also listened to Hurley's summary of an Army Corps of Engineers letter describing Trendowicz's intentions to use a trailer at the marina for a restroom. The group maintains that the trailer is a non-conforming structure and that health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik has also determined that four toilets are needed there.

But Building Inspector Bob Egan said that the Parker Avenue group's arguments had a lot of open ends.

"This group doesn't seem to want to do things the right way," he said. "They can say things with such an air of authority. For instance, they bugged Godzik until he finally came up with some water recommendations and now they're insisting that Trendowicz's not meeting recommendations is a violation."

What Godzik actually wrote in a memo to Haddad on April 8 is that the recommendation in Code of Massachusetts environmental regulations recommends one toilet for each gender for every 50 slips."

The board of health will meet to review CHM's plans for its sanitary facilities on April 27.

"As far as I know, the board [of health] does not plan to take any action to stop the project, because coming into compliance is a really simple matter," Godzik wrote. "No one has complained of any public health nuisances in the CHM area."

Harbormaster John Winters met with the Board of Health Tuesday night and told them that the federally funded pumpout boat is underutilized and could handle CHM's expansion.

"The Board of Health asked if we could handle the increased amount of boats in the harbor and I said, definitely,'" said Winters. "Very few people utilize this free pumpout service and we're trying to advertise it. The reason we can handle more boats is that our harbor is not a cruising harbor where people come in after a week—we mostly have 'day-trippers' so our sewage tanks don't get filled that quickly."

Egan, who was criticized by the group for missing violations, said that the group was vague when they first requested that he look around Trendowicz's marina and that he didn't hear back from them on his assessment until more than 10 days after the 30-day appeal period.

"If they had any questions, why didn't they bring them to me?" he asked. "Instead, they're going to various boards waving papers and saying they've found violations that are basically loose-ended arguments."

Trendowicz, who is one of the owners of Hingham-based SeaChain LLC development company and is connected with marinas in Gloucester, Weymouth, Hingham and Cohasset, is well-versed in water-access issues.

Cohasset Harbor Marina at the end of Parker Avenue looks peaceful despite a swirl of controversy over plans to expand the facility.

Marty Cohn, Trendowicz's public relations and marketing representative, said that Trendowicz has permits for his expansion from the Army Corps, state Dept. of Environmental Protection and Conservation Commission. Expansion opponents worry Trendowicz will build piers and force the town to approve the land-based aspects of the project—parking and access—as the only sensible conclusion to the project.

Cohn also said that Trendowicz continued to contact regulatory agencies while negotiating privately with selectmen to clarify different scenarios.

"The selectmen were fully aware that we were gathering that information," Cohn said, referring to letters Trendowicz wrote to the EPA asking to push back the federal anchorage line by 10 feet to the north and 10 feet to the south of his marina while he was conducting executive meetings with selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Diane Sullivan and town manager Mark Haddad.

"What I would strongly suggest is that the group talk to the selectmen to verify that," he said. "They knew that as part of those 'good faith' discussions, that he was gathering that information. What I'm declaring is that Paul [Trendowicz] has unequivocally followed every regulation and approval process followed with the appropriate public comment periods. This is a fully open process."

A neighbor reported that pilings were placed outside CHM yesterday.

"The big question here is jurisdiction," Moore said "Trendowicz has been working with the Army Corps and has done his homework so he'll be a favored fellow in a court dispute because he is providing access to the water.

"We forget that Cohasset is perceived as a restrictive town," he said.

Planners okay Jerusalem Road Estates

Next: Sewer and conservation commissions

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Planning board members gave the final nod to plans for a 23-home subdivision at the old Curtis Estate off Jerusalem Road last week, after a give and take process as rocky as the ledge Weymouth developer Steven Corey wants to build on.

This caps three years of negotiations and at least 20 applications by Corey to the board concerning the 43-acre site which will be called Jerusalem Road Estates.

But before that can happen, Corey will have to go before the conservation commission and sewer commission.

Corey's attorney, Charles Humphreys, told board members that he will be filing with both commissions around May 22, but wants to make sure he has a stabilized plan first.

The planning board set nine conditions on which approval of the plan depended, such as building a two-foot stone wall off the east sideline of Lincoln Lane to help reduce the slope from the Gregory property and answer concerns about the breakout potential of sewage onto ledge in the area. Another condition called for the developer to put grass over the emergency access road on the site where water flows to Black Rock Road, which will be collected by means of a culvert so that it travels under the emergency road and is then conducted to a wetland collector.

Still, at least one abutter isn't happy.

William Chisholm, 605 Jerusalem Road, expressed his astonishment when final approval of the plan was granted.

"What in the world happened since the October meeting where you said you wouldn't approve the plan unless many conditions were met?" he asked. "I've been at every meeting and didn't hear it discussed. Don't we have a right as citizens to discuss this before this is passed?"

Chairman Al Moore said that the board had discussed the subdivision "ad nauseum, such as reducing the number of lots from the original plan, tying the plot into town sewer, and the length of the road."

Chisholm challenged the board, and said that he could prove the matter was not discussed by reviewing the minutes of the board's meetings.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy suggested that if Chisholm felt aggrieved, he should discuss that with his own lawyer. "If Corey doesn't like it, he can do the same," Sturdy said.

Back in October of last year, Sturdy opposed the project but was excluded from the voting process at the request of Humphreys because he had missed several prior meetings.

Sturdy reminded Chisholm that he didn't approve the project back in October when the board was deadlocked. Moore cast the tie-breaking vote.

Chisholm told the board that if the subdivision goes in, lights from drivers exiting and entering its driveway will shine into his home's windows.

Humphreys challenged Chisholm's complaint, saying that changes were made so that lights from traffic leaving the subdivision would not shine into his home.

"Not my house, but 609 Jerusalem Road," corrected Chisholm. "Now it is going to shine in my house. I want to know whether or not any decisions made here are legal if this matter was not, in fact, discussed."

"I've been at every meeting and didn't hear it discussed. Don't we have a right as citizens to discuss this before this is passed?"

— William Chisholm, 605 Jerusalem Road

John Modzelewski of Civil Designs, Inc., an engineer hired by the town, was responsible for checking on whether or not conditions had been met at the proposed subdivision.

"John has broad discretion and we go by his recommendations," said Moore in a phone interview this week. "I'm not about to check his drainage calculations. That's why we're paying him."

Moore said that the applicant has certain rights to his property, and that Chisholm and other neighbors to the proposed subdivision may be upset that the board has come to an agreement with Humphreys and Corey.

Kevin and Debra Brewer, 604 Jerusalem Road, have brought an appeal through their attorney, Richard A. Henderson, which is based on a non-conforming lot situation that was created by the planning board's approval of Corey's plans.

"The parcel in question has many problems and is under appeal from one of the abutters," said Moore.

At this point, Corey will need to go before the sewer commission and conservation commission.

The sewer commission does not share Corey's view that the development should have access to the new sewer line that will link North Cohasset with the Hull sewage treatment plant, because of the limited capacity agreed to in the town's contract with Hull.

The conservation commission will also have to weigh the distance Corey's subdivision will need to sit from Rattlesnake Run, which appears to be a perennial river protected under the state's Rivers Protection Act. That act prevents the building of any structure within 200 feet of the perennial river's annual mean high water mark.

"There is obviously going to be some fairly extensive litigation with the sewer commission with the hook-ups, as well as a fight with the conservation commission over the River's Act and Rattlesnake Run. But they're not obstacles we have to deal with. We set conditions, they were met, and we had to approve," Moore said.

Taxation committee debates Wompatuck Park bill

Could spell tax relief for Cohasset

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Wompatuck State Park contains 3,500 acres of pristine park land and forest for the enjoyment of the public. The entire park resides within the borders of Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset. The three towns do not have to pay to have a state park within their borders, but there is a hidden cost. The land within Wompatuck state park cannot be developed, depriving the towns of potential tax revenue from residential or commercial development. Help may be on the way.

The state Legislature is considering a bill that would compensate the three towns for the loss of tax revenue created by the existence of the park. The legislation would amend a current law that compensates other towns with similar situations. Similar amendments have failed in the past, and this version may also fail. But local and state officials are hopeful that the Legislature will enact the amended legislation. The Joint Committees on Taxation discussed the amendment on March 24. Supporters of the amendment are still awaiting a decision from the committee.

"This bill would enable these towns to benefit from current statute by receiving compensation for the loss of tax revenue due to the use of town property for public purposes," said state Senator Robert L. Hedlund, a supporter of the legislation. "Towns across the Commonwealth currently receive reimbursements for circumstances very similar to those of Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset. This bill simply seeks to include these towns within the scope of the statute."

"This would certainly help us with our budget by providing funds in lieu of tax money we could collect if the land were developed."
— Town Manger Mark Haddad

Erik Clausen, Legislative Director for Senator Hedlund, said the taxation committee is studying the physical impacts of the amendment. Clausen said that such studies sometimes are used as a means to bury a piece of legislation. The exact means of reimbursement and the actual amounts the three towns could receive have not been discussed yet, Clausen said. Supporters are waiting to see what the taxation committee does before discussing specifics of the amendment.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the amendment would help Cohasset by providing some needed funds.

"This would certainly help us with our budget by providing funds in lieu of tax money we could collect if the land were developed," Haddad said. "Considering we have to make up more than $700,000 deficit because the override failed at the polls last week, we could use any help we can get."

Health insurance for fixed income families

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced the creation of two new programs to be administered by the Division of Medical Assistance to expand access to health insurance for people on fixed incomes in the Commonwealth.

- Mass Health Family Assistance helps low-income working families and adults pay for their share of the premium for employer-sponsored health insurance. If there are no children in the family, the adult worker must be employed by a small business.
- The Insurance Partnership helps small businesses pay for the cost of health insurance for their low-income workers.

"This is wonderful news for low-income workers of the Commonwealth," Hedlund said.

"These two new programs will help many families get the necessary health coverage that they need."

For more information, call Mass Health Family Assistance at (800) 841-2900 for premium assistance for working people or Insurance Partnership at (800) 399-8285 for assistance for small businesses.

County proposes using deed taxes for open space

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Potential open space is disappearing in Cohasset at a pace that frightens some residents. Developers are paving large parcels of land in Cohasset for office buildings, subdivisions, supermarkets and myriad other uses. Purchasing open space isn't much of an option considering the tough financial situation the town finds itself in at this point in time. The County Commissioners have a solution. They are proposing a plan that would divert to cities and towns in Norfolk County 50 percent of the excise tax collected on house deeds. When home buyers purchase a house, they pay an excise tax to the Registry of Deeds. Currently, the entire excise tax is placed in the state's general fund.

Cohasset home buyers pay $147,143 in deed excise taxes annually. If the open space bill is enacted, Cohasset would have all of that money for open space use.

Cohasset officials have thrown their support behind the County Commissioners' plan. The Taxation Committee of the Massachusetts Legislature was scheduled to discuss the proposal on Wednesday, April 14 after The Mariner went to press. According to selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, selectman Merle Brown traveled to Beacon Hill on Wednesday with a group of Norfolk County legislators to lobby for the bill. McMorris added that she is a strong supporter of the bill because it would fund not only open space acquisition but the rehabilitation of existing recreational facilities.

In a letter to other town boards, Town Manager Mark Haddad asks for their support for the legislation.

"The board of selectmen unanimously supports this legislation, and to that end, would request that the planning board and the conservation commission submit letters of support to our legislators indicating their support for the project as well," Haddad said. "Any increase in revenues provided by the state would lessen the need to increase taxes under Proposition 2-1/2 and provide some relief to our taxpayers."

According to figures compiled by the County Advisory Board Coordinator using information from the Registry of Deeds, Cohasset home buyers pay $147,143 in deed excise taxes annually. If the open space bill is enacted, Cohasset would have all of that money for open space use. According to a memo from the County Commissioners' office, the amount paid to towns could even be as much as 33 percent higher.

"Clearly, this is a good bill for Cohasset in the sense that there would be no new taxes, but we would get 148,000 for open space," said Deborah Cook, chairman of the new open space and recreation committee. "We could potentially leverage that money into a $1 million bond to buy parks or recreation facilities, or to maintain our current facilities. Cohasset does have more land than other towns, and the more we can set aside, the better off we will be. Unless we make a concerted effort to purchase open space, it will be gone."

The funds could be used for a variety of purposes beyond open space purchases. Town could also rehabilitate existing parks, restore outdoor sports facilities, install field lights, construct tot lots, build roller-blading facilities, or fund almost any other public, outdoor recreation facility.

The proposal would require towns to set aside the money in a separate account for the sole purpose of purchasing open space or rehabilitating parks and recreational facilities. Any interested generated by the fund would also have to be used for open space. The money could not be diverted into a town's general fund to pay for other public necessities.

Representative Ron Mariano, D-Quincy is sponsoring the bill in the state Legislature. Mariano said there is widespread support for the bill among the cities and towns that constitute Norfolk County.

"The benefit of this legislation is that it allows communities to develop long-term planning strategies and solutions to protect open space and park-land," Mariano said. "We must envision the impact that this legislation could have on the quality of life in our communities over the course of 10, 50, or 100 years."

In a letter to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, the Norfolk County Commissioners have asked to meet with town officials to discuss the proposal.

"We are cautiously optimistic — for a number of reasons — as to the prospects for this legislation during this 1999 Legislative session," the commissioners state in their letter. "However, this will not occur without concentrated and timely supportive action at the local government level."

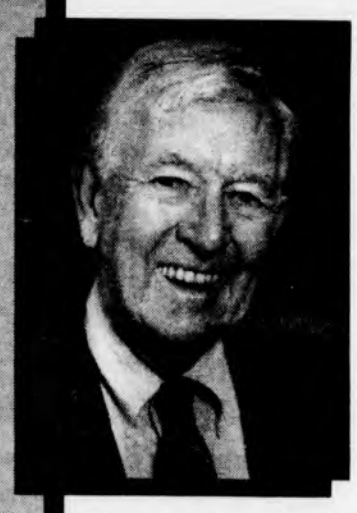
Thanks for thinking of us first!



Dear customers and friends:

In a recent Vancouver-Washington based survey of households throughout Southern Massachusetts, people were asked the following question? "When you think of a Realtor, who do you think of first?

The survey called it "TOMA"–Top of Mind Awareness, and like Crest for toothpaste, and Campbells for soup, Conway has it for real estate. I guess that means we've done something right in this business for the past 41 years. Thank folks, and when you're buying or selling real estate, we hope you'll continue to think of us first.*

DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVANT

Had the nicest chat with Professor Richard Hogarty; he directs programs in Public Affairs at UMass/Boston where Fred Koed is a graduate student. Professor Hogarty has nominated Fred as a Convocation Student Speaker, an honor, indeed! The reasons for his nominating Fred were plentiful: His high GPA , his articulation (always has something important to say). Fred works for the office of Immigration and Refugees and is a real dedicated public servant. In the Masters Graduate Program he has been an outstanding student (he earns his degree in June).

Professor Hogarty said "Fred is a solid human being, sensitive and caring in every situation from graduate student to public servant — he has elicited trust and performed well. Fred has an excellent sense of public interest, an integrity and commitment that allows him to be politically sophisticated without becoming cynical or manipulative." We know you are deserving of this honor, Fred, hopefully you will always know how important you are to all of us!

DEAN'S LIST

Three Cohasset residents have recently been named to the dean's list for the fall semester at Boston University. Students recognized for this honor include: Jemilah Y Afshar, Andrea E. Mercurio and Amie Theriault.

We congratulate these three young ladies and are sure that you will hear about them again next semester! They are good!

CANDIDATES FORUM

Hats off to The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce — the Candidates Forum took place once again this year, and each candidate gave a statement, then answered questions from a Chamber panel and those in the audience — all candidates were invited to attend — as we went to the polls Saturday; if we were uninformed, it was our fault! Between the wonderful dinners (i.e. the Beechwood Congregational Church "Meet the Candidates Night"), Cable T.V. and, yes, your "Mariner," everything was covered.

Whether your candidate won or lost, be sure to thank them for taking the time, the effort, and the caring for our town to run for office! Winners and non-winners are to be applauded!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Pork is tasty and so versatile!

As you may have noticed, pork seems to be taking the place of chicken, fish and beef — it is tasty, economical and so versatile! Plus everyone really loves it!

This is a yummy casserole of pork chops, ideal at this time of year because you can stick it in the oven, then go back to the garden for an hour! In fact you can also cook the sweet potatoes and lima beans (don't say "yuck" til you've tried these).

Here we go.

Casserole of Pork Chops

4 loin pork chops
1/3 cup chopped onion
3 tbsp. chopped celery
2 tbsp. chopped green pepper
1/2 tsp salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
1/8 tsp. garlic salt
1 cup water
1/3 cup catsup

Brown chops lightly on both sides in a heavy pan. Place them in a large casserole and add remaining ingredients. Cover tightly.

Sweet Potato in Orange Baskets

2 cups mashed sweet potatoes
3 tbsp butter
1/4 tsp salt
1/8 tsp pepper
2 oranges
2 marshmallows, halved

Combine mashed sweet potatoes with butter, salt and pepper.

Place in top of double boiler to keep warm. Cut oranges in half and remove most of the orange pulp, leaving very little in the orange-skin cup. Fill each with sweet potato mixture and top with half a marshmallow. Place in 8-inch baking pan.

Spicy Lima Beans

1/2 cup diced bacon
1/2 cup chopped onion
2 tbsp. flour
1/4 tsp. salt
1/8 tsp pepper
1 bay leaf
1-1/2 cups cooked tomatoes
2 cups cooked lima beans
1/2 cup fine bread crumbs
3 tbsp melted butter

Brown bacon and onion in large frying pan; add flour, salt, pepper and bay leaf, stir until smooth. Add tomatoes and lima beans, blend well and pour into greased 2-qt casserole. Combine fine crumbs and melted butter, sprinkle over top.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place pork chops on lower shelf. At the end of 30 minutes baking time, place lima beans on shelf with pork chops and orange baskets on shelf directly above. Continue baking 30 minutes longer.

Total cooking time, 60 minutes. Serves 4

Hope you like this and the ease with which it is prepared! GOOD!

TURNING 95 YEARS YOUNG

All of those people are special indeed, and here's one more birthday that will top the list — she used to be around town constantly, be seen everywhere — now, she isn't quite as able to walk as much, she has to rely on her daughter to get her around — that's okay, she will be 95 April 24! A very special day for a very special lady! Now that we have your interest piqued be sure that you give Vi Tuthill a huge hug and many kisses when you see her, she'll love you for it. A lovely lady, indeed!

PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM

Allison Berg, a student at Notre Dame Academy, will travel to our nation's capitol as a participant in Presidential Classroom's Science Technology and Public Policy Program. Allison is a Junior and very active in school-related activities, as well as various community organizations — she is an honor student taking Advanced Placement courses with a current GPA of 4.25 and plans on pursuing a career in science and technology. Presidential Classroom is an educational organization that brings together high school students from across the country for a week of seminars, discussions and meetings with the nation's most influential leaders. It offers the chance to see policymakers in action. To the best of Allison's knowledge, no student from Notre Dame Academy has ever attended a Science and Technology special focus session of the Presidential Classroom program.

We all are ever-so-proud of Allison, and of her dream being fulfilled — she would love your help to make it all possible — she needs to raise a tuition of $920 for the week, which includes everything from programs to room and curriculum material to accommodations at Georgetown University.

She will be attending the week of June 19-26, and must have her tuition money submitted by May 1. Can you help Allison by a donation, big or small (tax deductible)? If so, make your donation payable to: Presidential Classroom and send it to 9 Ledgewood Dr., Cohasset, MA. She promises to fill us in upon her return, which will be great!

Help her to be the first Science and Technology Presidential Classroom student form Notre Dame, she'll make us all proud!

GOOD NEWS SOUGHT

That's all that you have let me in on this week, hopefully there is more to come! We all love reading YOUR news!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Back to the drawing board

There's no doubt voters on Saturday sent a strong message to town officials. As Selectman Ronnie McMorris said at the polls after the votes were counted, residents are concerned about where their tax rate is going.

Now selectmen and the school committee must work with the town manager to grapple with how to bring the budget back into balance.

It is not clear if selectmen will seek another override for a lesser amount or make deep cuts to reach a balanced budget.

Those issues will be decided over the next two weeks. What is clear is that another town meeting – likely on May 17 – will be needed to approve a new budget and set the stage possibly for another override try.

This is a good time to remember that we are one town. To those who opposed the override and are relieved that it failed, we hope you'll roll up your sleeves and help the town reach a workable solution to the budget deficit.

To those who supported the override and are stunned by the results, we hope you'll approach the new budgetary process with creativity and an open mind.

Sometimes it's valuable to see Cohasset through "new" eyes. We had the pleasure this week of interviewing John Hovorka, who is president of the Cohasset Historical Society. Mr. Hovorka moved to Cohasset with his wife Marjorie in 1994.

He points out that Cohasset has it about right.

"Residents here are concerned with quality of life," he said. "They can draw the line between standard of living, which is just stuff — and quality of life, which is much more than that."

Thanks for serving

We'd like to say "thank you" to former sewer commissioner Ted Guild, health board chairman Kevin Ulmer, assessor Jim Laggrotteria, school committee chairman Rick Shea, school board member Joe McElroy, Bettie Grassie of the housing authority, recreation commissioner Shelanne Durkin and library trustee Doris McNulty who stepped down from their respective boards after serving the town well.

Special thanks goes to Nan Roth whose financial acumen and common sense were a nice addition to the board of selectmen. Mrs. Roth lost in a tough, three-way race for two selectman seats. We wish her well.

Future of schools in jeopardy

To the Editor:

Three years ago my husband and I returned to Massachusetts with our youngest daughter. We chose to live in Cohasset primarily because it was a small quiet town with a school system that had an excellent reputation.

Today, I write this letter with great fear for the future of the Cohasset school system. The vote that was so overwhelming against the override makes me question the value this town places on the education of our young. I do not have statistics before me but I would have to believe that the vast majority of people who live and/or own property in Cohasset are well educated professionals earning far above the average income. I cannot understand why concerned, educated citizens fail to support a school system that is beginning to deteriorate because of inadequate funding. Our teachers work hard and long hours, they believe in and support our students and yet the citizens of this town cannot see fit to provide those dedicated teachers with a salary that is "average."

We, who live in Cohasset, have chosen to live in a small town with a citizenry that is 93% residential and only 7% commercial; with that luxury we must accept certain responsibilities. Cohasset has almost no commercial base from which to draw monies; therefore, the responsibility for providing adequate funding to run the programs that support the town must fall upon the citizens. (Putting undue stress upon those with limited incomes should also be a concern, perhaps there are creative ways to address that problem.)

We have elected and appointed town committees who have submitted thoughtfully prepared budgets, budgets that have already sustained serious "cuts." It is now our responsibility to support those programs with our tax money, for, if we don't, we will find ourselves living with a deteriorating school system (and a municipal system that fails to provide the services we all seem to expect). Without adequate compensation our young zealous teachers will leave for better jobs and our older and wiser teachers will finally be forced to leave the profession they love to find work that pays a just salary. Cohasset will find itself with teachers who are not qualified, buildings that are inadequate and a school system that is below average and, if that happens, we will also find our property values plunging.

I probably have no right to express my opinions publicly because I did not vote in Saturday's election. I was out of town unexpectedly, leaving before 7 a.m. and returning after the polls closed. I must say, however, that today I was embarrassed to enter the high school as a citizen of Cohasset.

Support for Daffodil Days

TO THE EDITOR:

As the Regional Executive of the American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days campaign this year, I would like to thank the South Shore area for their generosity and support.

The South Shore area sold more than 21,600 bunches of daffodils during the event, raising more than $122,000 for the American Cancer Society's service programs for patients and their families. Thanks to the people of the community, the American Cancer Society can continue to provide information and guidance, education programs for cancer patients, transportation to treatment, and one-on-one support for women with breast cancer. Last year, these service programs reached more than 2,000 cancer patients and family members in Southeastern Massachusetts.

A special thanks goes to the many Daffodil Days volunteers who worked on advance sales, promotion, direct sales and delivery of flowers. They made the event a pleasure to coordinate and did an outstanding job.

In observance of Volunteer Recognition Week April 19-23, the American Cancer Society would like to extend a huge thanks to all of the volunteers who help ACS continue in its mission to decrease cancer mortality rates through research; to decrease incidence rates through prevention and detection; and to improve cancer patients' quality of life through ACS services and programs.

The community support shown to the American Cancer Society demonstrates the commitment we all have to fighting cancer. The American Cancer Society is deeply grateful for the generosity of all of our supporters.

HEALTH NOTES

The hydrologic cycle in a coastal environment

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Pollution from roads and roofs

About 50% of the pollution that enters our ponds, rivers and streams comes from storm water runoff from roads, parking lots, and roofs. The way pollution gets into surface water runoff is complicated, but it is important to understand it because the increased impervious area in our community has an important effect on our health. Everything from allergies to hepatitis can be carried by surface water crossing our property. If surface water can not enter the ground where it can be freed from harmful bacteria and other pathogens, it remains on the ground where it comes in contact with humans and animals.

The process by which water is purified by entering the ground and losing its impurities is called the hydrologic cycle. Water reaches the ground in the form of rain or snow, and gradually enters pervious ground to replenish the water table. Where there are roads and roofs, the water can not enter the ground and the water table is lowered thereby. If there is sufficient separation between the water table and septic systems, the water leaving a leaching field is sufficiently clear that it can be further purified by passing through the ground until it becomes safe and can serve as an aquifer to replenish a pond. Water from the pond can then be further purified to serve as a source for drinking water.

Pollutants from vehicles, and many other impurities may be rendered inert if they are mixed with groundwater for a sufficient time. But surface runoff receives no such treatment, and it can carry pollutants directly into our water supply as is happening in Scituate. Of course, if groundwater comes in contact with sodium compounds, it eventually becomes salty. A small amount of salt removes water's flat taste, but too much is rapidly evident, and becomes a threat to those with low sodium intake requirements. It is important for people to realize that the increase in impervious area over our soil does not come without a penalty of increased likelihood of pollution of our surface water and those ponds, streams, and estuaries into which it empties.

Is Lawn a Four Letter Word?

Here are a few suburban legends:

1. The dose rate recommended on a popular fertilizer product at a local hardware store is 544 pounds per acre per season. When Title 5 regulations were written, they were based on the state's estimated annual use of 2.5 pounds of fertilizer per acre, a state average.

2. When making calculations about surface water runoff many hydrogeologists consider golf courses with their acres of highly fertilized lawns with little pervious underlayment, as bad as parking lots and roofs from a soil absorption standpoint.

3. Lawn fertilizer causes pond scum.

4. Lawn chemicals kill microorganisms which purify ground water.

5. Some families believe that a slightly unkempt lawn with no fertilizer is one of the signs of old money. It's called a silvan environment.

Legends 1, 2, 3 and 4 are actually true.

Logan Airport indigestion

TO THE EDITOR:

I attended a public hearing held at the state's Transportation Building April 6, Wednesday evening, to discuss the addition of Runway 14/32 to Logan Airport's already crowded runway system. The furtherance of "high technology" in eastern Massachusetts was consistently quoted as a desired objective of the proposed runway addition. Speaking as a currently registered professional engineer, I'm firmly in the camp of "high technology." I am also one of the individuals representing the seemingly parochial interests of Hingham — my town — and indirectly — the towns of Hull, Cohasset and Scituate. In regard to Runway 14/32 — if it's turned on, it will produce a tremendous explosion of noise pollution over my town and surrounding towns. This increase will exacerbate the 60-second interval flights that already occur over our heads.

During the public hearing, "proponents" and "opponents" alternately spoke through a microphone to the assembled audience and media. It impressed me how seemingly automated were the lady and gentlemen "suits," who continually droned mantras about the "great benefits of the new 14/32 runway." Their two most constantly used expressions were "Greater Boston Area" and "high technology." What do these two expressions equate to most citizens of eastern Massachusetts? Generally recognized by all — these expressions can be equated with areas radiating from within and without Route 495, the western reach of the Mass. turnpike beyond Worcester, and Route 128. Surely there is a jest here! The sponsors of expansion for an irremediably boxed-in Logan Airport area, a tiny kernel within a very large nut, cannot sincerely be considered to speak for outlying areas at distances by auto up to 1-1/2 or more hours away! Yet Massport has, and will continue, to speak to this entire region unless they are checked.

Currently, tremendous political and economic power, an inertia if you will, is locked into a small-sized area called Logan Airport by its Massport sponsors. I suggest that a regional authority much less parochial than Massport mandate the latter to divest itself of its centrist position, and instead begin to represent the greater region called "Massachusetts." After all, the "Mass..." in Massport means Massachusetts, doesn't it? Likewise, since we're considering "air"-planes, the "...Port" in Massport must refer to an "air"-port, which can be located anywhere on land, not just by the sea.

Why not go further and have a four-state authority representing Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts? Massport could be eliminated altogether, at least in regard to "air" concerns. We really live in a relatively small region, most of the area of which could easily be tucked, with room to spare, into any of our western states. This regional authority could unbiasedly consider the former Hanscom Air Force Base as a candidate for national and international flights. The same authority could explore existing airports — Greene in R.I., Manchester in N.H., and the Portland Airport in Maine — for a significant upgrade to national and international status.

Relaxing Easter Sunday

TO THE EDITOR:

Did anyone notice how pleasant and relaxing Easter Sunday was this year? The streets around Cohasset and Hingham were almost bare all day long! There was none of the usual rush and congestion along the highways and byways. Instead, a leisurely pace that restored the body and the soul. I began to wonder. Had I been transposed into a bygone era? No, there were no horse and buggies in sight. But, ah, there was nary a car parked at the Stop & Shop, and, as I looked further, no cars at Shaw's Market, either. Yes, here at last in the nearly 21st century was a day of peace and quiet, a time to attend church, and a day to spend happily at home with the family. A true Sabbath day, and for it we give thanks.

McMorris appreciates support

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to thank everyone who supported me in the election this past Saturday. My thanks as well to my family, friends and neighbors for their continued support and help. I am grateful to everyone who took the time to talk with me throughout the election process about the issues facing Cohasset. As always, your thoughts are important to me.

I am also grateful to the newspaper media, the Chamber of Commerce and the Elder Affairs Board for providing the candidates with forums to discuss these issues. I look forward to three more years of our working together.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank Nan Roth for her many years of hard work and service to the town.

What's in a name? A lot of money

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I have a suggestion for those members of the local finance committee who are fighting the annual losing battle with the municipal budget.

The city of Huntingtion Beach, Calif., where Proposition 13 is the equal of our Prop 2 1/2, has named Coca Cola the "official city beverage" with exclusive rights to put its logo and sell Coke on city property - including police cars and fire trucks -for 10 years.

The Sun Bowl, an obscure post-season college football game in west Texas, became the John Hancock Sun Bowl when it found an angel. Then it was the John Hancock Bowl. Now it's the Sun Bowl again, John Hancock having lost interest.

For this, the Coca Cola Bottling Co. will pay Huntington Beach $300,000 a year for the next decade, enough to paint city buildings for the first time in years, with another $300,000 added to fix up the city's parks for the next decade.

Pepsi can still sell its product in Huntington Beach, in restaurants, supermarkets and convenience stores, only not on city property, like beaches, parks and municipal buildings.

And Mayor Dave Garofalo pledges that the promotion of Coke will be done tastefully, if you'll pardon the expression; there won't be signs on police cars saying "Drive Safely, Have a Coke."

This may be the coming thing in municipal finance.

New York has already designated Rollerblade as the "Official Skate of New York City Parks." Dr. Pepper has a deal with a Texas school system to put its logo on a high school roof where it can be seen by airline passengers landing in Dallas airport.

Huntington Beach is now thinking of anointing an official city credit card. Sacramento is considering extending a similar deal to Pepsi-Cola. Huntington Beach is getting queries from communities as far away as Cleveland.

"If Calvin Klein comes out with a bathing suit line, maybe we'll talk," says Don Schulte, a Huntington Beach marketing executive. "We can put lifeguards in Klein bathing suits and sweatsuits. We can put beach parking attendants in Nike uniforms."

Shaking down corporations for money to keep the wolf from the door is a longtime practice in sports, where it has produced such monstrosities as the Poulan Weed Eater Bowl and the USF & G Sugar Bowl.

The Sun Bowl, an obscure post-season college football game in west Texas, became the John Hancock Sun Bowl when it found an angel. Then it was the John Hancock Bowl. Now it's the Sun Bowl again, John Hancock having lost interest.

The home of the Celtics and the Bruins in Boston started life as the Shawmut Center. Then it was the Fleet Center when Fleet bought out Shawmut. Now that Fleet is Fleet Boston, will the Center follow with a name change?

For the first 14 years of its existence, that outdoor entertainment complex in Mansfield was known as the Great Woods Center for the Performing Arts. Now, for an outlay of $9 million dollars over the next 11 years by the electronic company, it is the Tweeter Center.

A couple of years ago, word went around that a certain fast food company was planning to purchase the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia and rename it the "Taco Liberty Bell."

It wasn't true - not then, anyway.

Cohasset voters label Prop. 2-1/2 override a loser

"I was hoping against hope that people would support the override; but the voters have spoken, I respect them and I'm glad they came out in the numbers they did," Haddad said. "They clearly wanted to get the message out, and they did. It shows that the town meeting process and the election process work and that's what this is all about. Prop. 2 1/2 was voted in for a reason, and we have to live under those terms."

If approved, the override would have raised taxes on the average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 by $409.35, with the override accounting for $276.31 of that increase. The anticipated tax rate for FY2000, beginning July 1, would have been $16.15 per $1,000 of assessed valuation.

Selectmen were deeply divided over the budget presented to town meeting. Selectman Diane Sullivan proposed to trim the school budget by $54K, and Thomas Callahan warned about a worst-case scenario of four more years of general overrides. The other selectmen supported the budget.

Callahan said that there isn't a game plan at this point, since selectmen and school committee members will first meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight to discuss a new strategy.

"I know that the town manager is working on some figures," he said. "We don't know if we'll come up with a smaller override or no override at all. I kind of think we're looking at no override because of the level of the vote, but I don't think that's possible. Personally, I'm going to take a shot at having no override at all, but I don't have control over the budget. I will recommend that we (selectmen) cut the $1,000 salary we earn for our services."

Callahan pointed out that the budget is driven by debts from sewer installation, the high school athletic field, the DPW garage and other items.

"We're going to have another debt override proposed for the fall because of the need to repair Deer Hill and the high school," he said. "We have to start to deal with our unique resources. When people discuss teachers' salaries in Hanover, well, they have commercial property to draw from. As rich as we're perceived to be, we have our limits on what we can raise our taxes to."

Haddad will meet with selectmen, town accountant Michael Buckley, School Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey and the school committee Tuesday night, but will meet separately with selectmen tonight and April 22 to review options.

"I can't say what the possible scenario will be if what we come back with doesn't pass," said Haddad. "That's why I'm providing the board of selectmen with a balanced budget and a lesser override budget so that the board will understand the impacts of an override. At this point, we don't know what we're working with."

Selectmen will have to decide if they will go for a reduced override.

"We have an out of balance budget in the amount of $766,154 that was passed, so we'll have to go back to town meeting., potentially on May 17," said Haddad.

This year's budget was a two-step process.

The first town meeting okayed the budget, which was in the red by some $766K, necessitating an override. But since the override was not accepted at the polls, town and school officials will need to restrategize quickly so that the issue is settled in time for FY2000, which begins July 1.

Superintendent Malvey said that school staff is concerned about the repercussions of the failed override on school curriculum.

"Right now, I'm trying to reassure staff that we will work through this," he said. "Many of them have special projects they were planning on for their students that they're concerned will fall by the wayside."

Malvey doesn't believe that the town, as a whole, was trying to send a message by refusing the override.

"I think that when there is a negative concern, like an override, the "no" voters come out in force," he said. "I think the people that thought the override made sense may have thought that it would be approved as easily as it was at town meeting, and so they stayed away from the polls.

Malvey believes that it is possible that selectmen may ask them to go back to the original six percent budget increase proposed by Haddad, "but I'm hoping for somewhere between that and our nine percent figure."

Taxpayer group

Leonora Jenkins, president of the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, is pleased that voters did not support the override.

"After years of political rhetoric, the taxpayers have shown that they're fed up with the misleading statements that the schools have been giving them," she said. "People would like to see a real budget that shows expenditures; not inflated items."

Jenkins complained that the schools have not dealt with its lunch deficit, its electricity problem at the new Osgood, or its maintenance properly. She pointed to the crumbling stairs that drew comments from many voters as they entered the high school gym to vote at town meeting as an example of poor maintenance. She also said that she's passed the Osgood in the evenings and found the building and parking lot lights on, but no one parked there.

"This is part of the school's history when it comes to maintenance, such as the time they fixed the bathroom in the high school, and then had to redo it because it wasn't made handicap accessible," she said. "They have been doing things in a very unprofessional manner while year after year, people have been handing over their money in good faith," she said.

Susan Galligan, president of the pro-override Committee for Quality Town Services, is disappointed with the override veto.

"There were a lot of people who worked hard to get the override passed, and I thank them personally," she said. "I guess there just weren't enough of us. We're all disappointed, but mostly worried that people haven't focused enough on what will happen now that they've taken the drastic measure of not letting the override pass."

Galligan said it's easy for people to vote against paying taxes, and that it "takes guts and dedication" to understand how taxes are necessary for the wellbeing of the town and its future.

"I just don't think enough people were educated about what was in the budget and what was needed to keep it going," she said. "People don't understand that teachers' salaries are always a problem anyway, and that teachers need to be compensated at market value for their years in service. I also think the school budget fluctuations are difficult for folks outside the system to understand."

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said that Cohasset and comparable towns have to accept school budgets that are increasing well beyond Prop. 2 1/2.

"Increasing enrollments, skyrocketing special dducation costs, technology needs and state curriculum are not choices," she said. "These are expensive facts of life in our schools. Similarly, above average teachers at average wages and average class sizes are not luxuries."

Ofsthun said that the selectmen and school committee will be meeting to discuss a new, reduced budget.

"Unfortunately, I can see where this will lead—substantial programmatic reductions within Cohasset's schools," she said. "I am hopeful that the defeat was born of a lack of knowledge and not a shift in support for educational excellence."

duced override or cutting the entire amount, there will be a serious impact on services, both in the school and in the town."

Re-elected selectman Ronnie McMorris would agree.

"I was disappointed, but not surprised because it has been difficult getting the message out on why an override is necessary," she said. "There are strong feelings in the community about where the tax rate is going and we'll have to deal with that."

New school committee member Betsy Connolly said that she was shocked the override didn't pass.

"The support at town meeting was really strong and comments I've heard relative to the budget have been really positive," she said.

Selectman Merle Brown was disappointed that the override failed.

"It means that we will lose our maintenance position for $42,000," he said. "There are going to have to be cuts in services. The schools will be hit hard. I think the PSO was not out doing its job."

With so much talk about the override, reflection about the election process itself was put on the backburner.

Dr. Robin Lawrence bested attorney Charles Sturdy for a place on the board of health, possibly due to the advantage his years in the public health sphere; and Koed's active campaign won him 631 votes more than Roth's 985. Koed also outpaced McMorris by 406 votes.

"I'm thankful that the citizens of Cohasset have given me the chance to serve in town government again."
— Newly elected selectman Fred Koed

Roth said that the results of the election reflect the organization and efforts that people put into campaigning.

"Fred outdid us all," she said. "I'm not sure his Internet campaigning did anything, but certainly his organization's phone calls, signs and getting out to vote helped him. I do think it's extremely unfortunate if this means that in the future, people interested in service to the town have to raise $5,000 to run for selectman. That will inhibit many, many good people from running."

Koed is satisfied with the results of his campaigners.

"It was a short campaign of eight weeks, I worked very hard and I'm thankful that the citizens of Cohasset have given me the chance to serve in town government again," he said. (Koed is a former water commissioner).

Koed said that the $5,000 he raised for his campaign is in the range of selectmen races on the South Shore.

"I'm sure there have been races in Cohasset that have raised more money," he said.

While selectmen grapple with the override, Roth will continue her work teaching severely dyslexic children in the Braintree public schools how to read, as well as supervise teachers in the Orton-Gillinghan reading method which works for these students.

"Much to my kids' dismay, I will be home supervising their homework," quipped Roth. "Of course, they're very disappointed and are taking this pretty hard. For now, I'm considering other things I can do for Cohasset in the near future, though I'm not sure it will be in the political arena."

There's No Such Thing As Natural Poor Health

Ever think about the phrase "natural good health"? There's a lot to that, because the natural condition of the body is good health. Sometimes, however, despite good diet, rest and exercise, good health is elusive. One frequent reason for this comes from the back. If one of the 24 movable segments in the spinal column is out of position — due to a fall or bump or twist — the nerves that branch out from between the segments, and the body organs they serve, are affected. The segment must be restored to its rightful position so the body has the opportunity to regain good health. Remember: poor health is not natural. Get a chiropractic checkup.

Kitchen Tour raises $10K for community center

Popular event attracts 600

By Lauryn Mittleman
CORRESPONDENT

"Oohs and aahs" echoed from all corners surrounding Cohasset center late last week as residents from town and beyond made their way through several of our town's most sensational kitchens.

Friday's sold-out affair marked year number three for the Cohasset Kitchen Tour, which benefits the South Shore Community Center. This time around the event featured five showcase residencies, one seeming to inspire more gasps and "remember that" note-taking than the next. With the five gracious homes centrally located, and with transportation provided to shuttle guests from one marvel to the next, the day by, all accounts, outdid itself.

"It was very successful," remarked coordinator Stephanie Church on Monday. "It was certainly our biggest ever and definitely record breaking. We had about 600 visitors, and raised over $10,000."

At the Chastain residence on Westgate Lane visitors made their way through the soothing and serene living space to be delighted by the newly remodeled kitchen complete with beige walls, stately wine racks and even a hand painted Tuscan scene. As was the case with all of the afternoon's decorator dream homes, the strict attention to detail was apparent. Subtle accents such as jars filled with espresso beans, loaves of bread just waiting to be broken and dangling ivy made the look come together.

Nearby, the Larson home of North Main Street featured an open and airy kitchen furnished completely in hues of yellow and blue. Daffodils and hyacinths dotted the windowsills, and the large circular breakfast table sat perfectly placed in a sunny spot. Fires crackling in both the entryway and English hunting-room warmly greeted Friday's guests, making even strangers feel right at home.

"It really is a happy house," offered volunteer tour guide Debbie Kuppens as she took in the smiles of passersby. "The ladies seem to really enjoy it."

After the workout of a walk up the hill to the Stone home on Black Horse Lane, guests were led past the vases of flowers and pussy willows to the French country kitchen adorned with hand painted tile. Perhaps still more impressive—the home's original butler's pantry, "faux" finished in simulated marble.

So how did it feel to have, at times, upwards of 200 people in her home?

"It was nothing," laughed Margaret Stone. "I love to entertain, it's been so much fun to do."

Not included on the shuttle route, but certainly not to be missed were the Atlantic Avenue kitchens of both the Blain and the Oswald families. That crossed from the list, tour-goers later returned to the Lightkeepers' residence for refreshments, and to take in the wares of vendors procuring handmade soaps, topiary and other crafts.

"It's been very nice and very civilized," commented jewelry crafter Janet Kingan of Hingham. "And in such a beautiful atmosphere."

And all this was for a great organization. It is events like Friday's tour, which directly work to keep the South Shore Community Center's doors open and its programs running.

"Being a non-profit organization, not funded by the federal, state or town government, we rely wholly on fund-raisers," explains coordinator Church.

The South Shore Community Center, situated at 3 North Main St., has been open to the public since 1944. Today the historic building houses a nursery school and pre-kindergarten, as well as Cohasset Elder Affairs. The community center additionally provides both educational and recreational programming for residents throughout the area, with offerings geared for both youngsters and adults. Open to center members as well as any South Shore resident interested are dance, dog training, decorating, first aid and even Tai Chi and yoga courses, as well as regularly scheduled single class workshops. Just recently, a sold-out "Cooking Corner" class, executed in both English and Italian, was led by chef Maryann Boothroyd of Saporito's restaurant fame. Coming soon, a similar evening of gourmet instruction taught by Chef Tony Ambrose of Boston's Ambrosia's On Huntington.

For the younger set, this summer the center will again host the annual Coastal Exploration Camp. Geared to children ages four through ten, the two-week sessions will include "hands-on" learning activities related to marine life, ecology, shipwrecks and then some. A second program, the Creative Adventures Summer Camp for youths in grades one through three, is also hosted in part by the South Shore Arts Center (SSAC). This three-week program features drawing, painting, printmaking, clay sculpting and collage at the SSAC, as well as cooking, bowling, gymnastics and computer instruction back home at the community center.

As is the case with all South Shore Community Center programming, enrollment is limited so early registration is encouraged.

But back to the event at hand, Kitchen Tour coordinators would like to express their appreciation to the many volunteers, as well as the numerous caterers and vendors who generously donated their food and time. An extra special thank you is extended to Circe's Grotto of Scituate, who supplied more than 250 sweets and treats.

Looking forward, with Friday's large-scale event just barely broken down, the South Shore Community Center's staff is already planning their next money making "to do." The next fund-raiser—a "Burn the Mortgage" party celebrating the center's newly acquired debt-free status, takes place May 16. The event, consisting of a champagne brunch among other festivities, promises to be among the top social events of the season, and tickets are on sale now.

And as for the year 2000's already anticipated Kitchen Tour, Church and fellow coordinators challenge any and all to open their homes and pantry doors for a worthwhile cause.

If you would like to volunteer your home to be reviewed by next year's kitchen tour committee, or for more information on South Shore Community Center events and programming, contact the center at (781) 383-0088.

Questions on women's health issues

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

Remember the children's game "20 Questions?"

Here is a version for you to play (with six fewer questions). Whether by yourself, or with a group of friends, test your knowledge about women's health issues.

QUESTIONS

1. Dietary fat affects your risk of breast cancer. True or false?

2. Women should do a breast self-exam as often as possible. True or false?

3. The breast cancer genes, BRCA1 and BRCA2, are found in most women with breast cancer. True or false?

4. Mastectomy is the best treatment for breast cancer. True or false?

5. Breast cancer is the most common cancer for women. True or false?

6. Chemotherapy harms the fetus, so women cannot receive treatment during a pregnancy. True or false?

7. Hair can be used to detect breast cancer. True or false?

8. Osteoporosis affects men and women equally. True or false?

9. Osteoporosis starts when a person is about 60 years old. True or false?

10. Calcium-rich foods are high in fat. True or false?

11. Heart disease is a man's disease. True or false?

12. All women should be on hormone replacement therapy (HRT) after menopause. True or false?

13. Soft drinks and coffee have a negative effect on osteoporosis. True or false?

14. Women experience a heart attack in the same way as men. True or false?

ANSWERS

1. False. A study published in the March 10 Journal of the American Medical Association did not find evidence that a low fat diet reduced the risk of breast cancer.

Is this a license to eat a high fat diet? Not yet! The American Cancer Society (www.cancer.org) still recommends a diet high in fruits, vegetables and grains and low in high-fat animal sources. Dietary fat seems to play a role in cancers of the colon and endometrium (uterus).

2. False. Monthly Breast Self-Exams (BSE) play an important part in early detection of breast cancer. Menstruating women should examine their breasts a few days after their period, when breasts are less tender and less affected by hormonal changes. Women with very irregular periods or who are post-menopausal should choose the same day of the month to do a BSE.

Since breasts change during the month, exams done more frequently than once a month can be confusing. Any lump, nipple discharge, or breast skin changes should be checked out right away by your physician. Fortunately, less than 10 percent of breast lumps are malignant.

3. False. The breast cancer genes are found in about 5 to 10 percent of women with breast cancer. About 70 to 80 percent of women who develop breast cancer have none of the high risk factors, such as a mother or sister with breast cancer.

4. False. Mastectomy is one treatment choice. A woman must work with her physician to decide the best options for her. A lumpectomy, chemotherapy and radiation provide other choices. The type of tumor, its size, whether it is completely in the breast or has spread in the axilla, and the woman's age are all factors to be considered.

Breast tumors do not develop suddenly. While the tumor needs to be treated soon after discovery to avoid further growth and spreading, a woman can take a little time to make the best decision for her. Dr. Susan Love's "Breast Book" is an excellent resource discussing these choices.

5. True. However, more women die of lung cancer than of breast cancer.

6. False. Researchers in Texas report that women can safely be treated with chemotherapy during pregnancy, with no harm to the fetus.

7. True. Australian researchers have found that the cell structure of hair from a person with breast cancer is different than the hair of a healthy person.

8. False. More women than men suffer from osteoporosis.

9. False. While the condition affects individuals as they get older, bone mass is determined by weight-bearing exercise and calcium and vitamin D intake from childhood on. We reach our peak bone mass at about age 35.

10. False. Dairy products, such as milk and cheese, are an excellent source of calcium and come in low-fat and non-fat forms.

11. False. While women's estrogen protects them from heart disease premenopausally, heart disease is the leading killer of post-menopausal women. While breast cancer kills about 44,000 women a year, the American Heart Association (AHA: www.americanheart.org) claims that in 1994, 500,000 women died of cardiovascular disease. The AHA estimates that one out of every two women will die of either heart disease or stroke.

12. False. Women need to weigh many factors to decide if HRT is right for them. Estrogen should never be given alone (unopposed estrogen) as this increases the risk of endometrial cancer. HRT should be a combination of estrogen and progesterone. Some women choose to use a low-dose birth control pill for both contraception and hormone therapy, at a time when their estrogen production is lessening (peri-menopause), yet they are still ovulating periodically, and are therefore still fertile. HRT lessens the risk of heart disease in post-menopausal women.

Some studies indicate an increased risk of breast cancer with HRT. HRT is contraindicated for women who have had an estrogen-dependent tumor.

13. True. Soft drinks and coffee contribute to calcium loss, increasing the risk of osteoporosis.

14. False. Women often do not recognize the signs of a heart attack in themselves, or are misdiagnosed at the hospital. Some women do experience the same "classic" signs of a heart attack as a man: crushing, squeezing pain below the breastbone with possible radiating pain into the left shoulder and arm. This may be accompanied by nausea, sweating, shortness of breath or dizziness.

Diabetic women may only experience the sweating and shortness of breath. There may not be any pain at all. This can be especially true for smokers. Nicotine has been shown to alter pain perception.

The problem with this is that the damage to the heart still takes place. Since the pain of a heart attack is often what motivates the victim to seek medical help, a "silent" heart attack means the delay of treatment. Studies have shown that the sooner medical intervention is given, the less permanent damage is sustained by the heart muscle.

"Clotbusting" drugs such as streptokinase and t-PA, when administered within 30 minutes of the onset of a heart attack, can prevent any damage to the heart from occurring. The more time elapses, the more potential harm is done to the heart muscle.

Angina, or chest pain, is often the first sign for a woman of the development of heart disease. However, this pain may be experienced only as back pain or jaw pain. There may also be pain radiating down the right shoulder and arm. But there may be no pain at all, just a feeling of "uneasiness."

If you think you might be having a heart attack, get to an emergency department (ED) right away (don't drive yourself, as your situation could worsen along the way and cause a car accident). Let the medical personnel know you might be having a heart attack, so you don't waste time in the ED waiting room with your "minor" symptoms.

Cell tower concerns on planning agenda

By Frank DiCesare
STAFF WRITER

Scituate and Cohasset residents will get a chance to air their views on a proposal to build a 180-foot wireless communication tower.

But not all who are expected to be at tonight's Scituate planning board meeting are in favor of the tower's proposed location on Route 3A adjacent to Cohasset Collision Center. Tom Daley of Cohasset, who lives within a three-quarter-mile radius of the proposed tower at Ledgewood Estates, said he hopes to see opponents turn out in large numbers for tonight's meeting.

"I think it's really important for the people to come to the meeting and weigh in on this most important issue, particularly how it pertains to health and visual impact," Daley said. "This is not a small tower."

Scituate planning board chairman William Limbacher said the board will look at the tower's special permit application with respect to the town's tower bylaw (governing the location of towers and establishing the overlay district where a tower can be placed). The board also plans to listen to feedback from the public.

"We are going to begin the process to give the applicant a chance to give an overview of the tower and field questions and comments from the public," Limbacher said.

Tower Ventures and its initial carrier, Omnipoint Communications, both of Providence, R.I., are co-applicants whose proposed tower will provide North Scituate and Cohasset with wireless communication services.

Keenan Brinn, tower development manager for Tower Ventures, said the company will lease the tower which will be situated on a 60 by 40 feet (400 square feet) parcel of land owned by King K. Corporation of Duxbury. The corporation's vice president, Stephen Bjorklund, said Scituate needs wireless communication coverage and his company has found "an excellent place for it."

"I'm hoping that the planning board will approve it. I can't see why they wouldn't," Bjorklund said. "There is a definite need to have two towers in town. The carriers have indicated there is a weak point between Scituate Town Hall site and the first site in Marshfield."

Brinn said the tower could serve cordless phones, pagers, microwave transmission used for data transmission, and public safety communications for the town's police and fire departments.

"Our application mimics the tower which was approved by the Scituate Planning Board last fall," Brinn said.

That action gave approval for a 180-foot communications tower which is slated to be located behind the Scituate Police Station.

Tower Ventures plans to build a stockade fence around the tower's base and landscape the area to hide three 10 by 20 square-foot building pads and one which is planned to be an 8 by 10 square-foot structure. The building pads would serve as shelters in which communication companies would store their battery packs and transmitting equipment. AT&T and Cellular One have already voiced interest in locating their equipment at the proposed site, Brinn said.

Tower Ventures currently owns and manages 24 towers in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Maine and New Hampshire.

Town planner Laura Harbottle said the proposed tower will be set back 134 feet from Route 3A. She added that a special permit allows the planning board to impose certain conditions on the applicants to reduce the tower's impact on the community. The applicants will be asked to screen the fenced in area and landscape it with a mix of rhododendrons and arborvitae, Harbottle said.

Brinn said Tower Ventures wants to minimize the visual impact of anything that is placed on the ground around the site, including the building pads.

"As you come up the road you won't see the base of the tower," he said.

"I think it's really important for the people to come to the meeting and weigh in on this most important issue, particularly how it pertains to health and visual impact. This is not a small tower."
— Tom Daley of Cohasset

"When you drive by what you will see are an array of antennas, microwave dishes and two-way paging sticks."

In addition to the proposed landscaping conditions, Harbottle said the planning board may also ask Tower Ventures to put up a tower removal bond to pay for the tower's dismantling in the event that its carriers discontinue their communication services.

Tower Ventures will also be asked to submit annual figures on the maximum exposure of radio frequency radiation the tower will transmit, Harbottle said.

But the town's consulting engineer, David Maxson, managing partner of Broadcast Signal Lab LLP of Cambridge, said even if the tower was operating with its maximum number of 18 tenants, it would still be compliant with the radio frequency safety requirements "by a huge margin."

Maxson, who reviewed the applicants' site plan, concluded that the proposed tower is well positioned to give carriers "an appropriate amount of signal overlap with another facility in the northeast."

"If someone is going to construct a tower like this it should be able to support the antennas of other carriers," Maxson said. "We have determined that the structure is well situated to support and be useful to multiple carriers as they build their networks."

Maxson said his only concern is that the proposed tower's location is "relatively small area for what the tower itself is capable of handling."

"I spoke with the applicant but they didn't feel it was a big concern either way," Maxson said. "If they needed a little extra space they could work that out with the landlord."

Maxson said based on the coverage information he received, the tower would serve two-thirds of the land area in Scituate. He added that future carriers may want to put up a second tower in the southern part of town to complete coverage along Route 3A.

In all, the tower could serve a maximum number of six cellular or personal communication services which could use as many as 12 antennas on big triangular brackets, Maxson said.

"This is why towns like Scituate want communication companies to co-locate on a single tower," he said.

Scituate's annual town meeting last year approved a wireless communication overlay district which runs from the Cohasset line to Tack Factory Pond on Route 3A.

ART NOTES

Boston Chamber Music Society to perform

The Boston Chamber Music Society will perform at the South Shore Art Center April 18 at 2 p.m. This concert, part of the Art Center's continuing Sundays at the Center series of musical concerts, affords South Shore residents a wonderful opportunity to experience this noted ensemble in the beautiful surroundings of the Bancroft Gallery. Cellist Ron Thomas, violinist Ida Levin and Mihae Lee on piano will perform the Dvorak Piano Trio in F minor Opus 65 as well as another selection.

The concert will be presented by celebrity guest announcer Richard Knisely, host of WGBH-FM radio's "Classical Performances." The Boston Chamber Music Society can be heard regularly on Classical Performances (89.7). These live radio performances take place at noon on the Thursday before a concert weekend.

The April 18 concert in the Bancroft Gallery is being funded by a SSAC patron. Because of this sponsorship, tickets will be available at a cost far below the usual ticket price. Tickets are $10 for members of the South Shore Art Center and $12 for non-members. Call (781) 383-ARTS (2787) to reserve a ticket or for more information.

Art show and sale

The Hull Garden Club and The Hull Artist Studio Connection present "Fine Art and Flowers" to be held Sat., April 24, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sun., April 25, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The event will take place at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bath House in Hull, overlooking Nantasket Beach.

In addition to the art show and sale, other events will be an affordable silent auction, two days, final bids by Sun., 3 p.m.; Ongoing demonstrations - "Art in Action"; and an exhibition of student artwork. Fresh flower arrangements will be raffled off Sun., at 3:30 p.m. Event is open to the public and wheelchair accessible.

April vacation activities at Art Center

Children grades 1-3 can enjoy a Caribbean Getaway with the South Shore Art Center April Vacation Camp from Tuesday, April 20, to Friday, April 23, 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Students will celebrate the tropical colors, sounds, flavors and fun of the Caribbean Islands. Offered in conjunction with the South Shore Community Center, the week will be spent exploring and creating art inspired by the islands, developing talents in cooking including some traditional Caribbean treats, investigating the exhibition at the Art Center and much more. Two April vacation workshops are also available, Fantastic Faces for grades 3-6 (4/20 and 4/22, 12:30 to 2:30 p.m., $35M/$45NM) and Nature's Art for grades 1-3 (4/20 and 4/22, 10 to 11:30 a.m., $40M/$50 NM).

Storyteller Derek Burrows

The South Shore Art Center will host a performance by musician and storyteller from the Bahamas, Derek Burrows. Mr. Burrows will entertain with an hour of Caribbean tales and songs. The performance will run from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. April 23, with an admission fee of $4 for members, and $5 for non-members. Call (781) 383-2787 for more information or to reserve tickets.

ART NOTES

Boston Chamber Music Society to perform

The Boston Chamber Music Society will perform at the South Shore Art Center April 18 at 2 p.m. This concert, part of the Art Center's continuing Sundays at the Center series of musical concerts, affords South Shore residents a wonderful opportunity to experience this noted ensemble in the beautiful surroundings of the Bancroft Gallery. Cellist Ron Thomas, violinist Ida Levin and Mihae Lee on piano will perform the Dvorak Piano Trio in F minor Opus 65 as well as another selection.

The concert will be presented by celebrity guest announcer Richard Knisely, host of WGBH-FM radio's "Classical Performances." The Boston Chamber Music Society can be heard regularly on Classical Performances (89.7). These live radio performances take place at noon on the Thursday before a concert weekend.

The April 18 concert in the Bancroft Gallery is being funded by a SSAC patron. Because of this sponsorship, tickets will be available at a cost far below the usual ticket price. Tickets are $10 for members of the South Shore Art Center and $12 for non-members. Call (781) 383-ARTS (2787) to reserve a ticket or for more information.

Art show and sale

The Hull Garden Club and The Hull Artist Studio Connection present "Fine Art and Flowers" to be held Sat., April 24, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sun., April 25, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The event will take place at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bath House in Hull, overlooking Nantasket Beach.

In addition to the art show and sale, other events will be an affordable silent auction, two days, final bids by Sun., 3 p.m.; Ongoing demonstrations - "Art in Action"; and an exhibition of student artwork. Fresh flower arrangements will be raffled off Sun., at 3:30 p.m. Event is open to the public and wheelchair accessible.

April vacation activities at Art Center

Children grades 1-3 can enjoy a Caribbean Getaway with the South Shore Art Center April Vacation Camp from Tuesday, April 20, to Friday, April 23, 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Students will celebrate the tropical colors, sounds, flavors and fun of the Caribbean Islands. Offered in conjunction with the South Shore Community Center, the week will be spent exploring and creating art inspired by the islands, developing talents in cooking including some traditional Caribbean treats, investigating the exhibition at the Art Center and much more. Two April vacation workshops are also available, Fantastic Faces for grades 3-6 (4/20 and 4/22, 12:30 to 2:30 p.m., $35M/$45NM) and Nature's Art for grades 1-3 (4/20 and 4/22, 10 to 11:30 a.m., $40M/$50 NM).

Storyteller Derek Burrows

The South Shore Art Center will host a performance by musician and storyteller from the Bahamas, Derek Burrows. Mr. Burrows will entertain with an hour of Caribbean tales and songs. The performance will run from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. April 23, with an admission fee of $4 for members, and $5 for non-members. Call (781) 383-2787 for more information or to reserve tickets.

Town gardeners unite for school project

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

They've maintained a civil distance until now. But given the proximity of their gardens at the Lightkeepers' Cottage, it was inevitable that Cohasset's two gardening clubs' talents would take root and naturalize.

"We met just before Christmas for the first time with the two clubs' presidents [Pamela Pelletier of the Community Garden Club and Patricia Chase of the Cohasset Garden Club], Margaret Cotter and myself," said Ginny Norman. "I think the idea was for the two garden clubs to both do something we haven't done before. Our work at the Lighthouse wasn't done as a joint project and we spent our money separately."

The two groups have managed nicely in the town, thank you, since the Cohasset Garden Club operates in the summer and the Community Garden Club of Cohasset meets from September through May.

"We get along fine. There's so much work to do, I don't think anyone will ever fight over weeding on someone else's turf."
— Pam Pelletier, Community Garden Club

The only time their gardening paths merge is in the summer at the Lightkeepers Cottage.

"We get along fine," said Pelletier. "There's so much work to do, I don't think anyone will ever fight over weeding on someone else's turf."

The groups' first joint venture will combine their money and gardening savvy together to provide landscaping for Cohasset public schools at no cost to the community.

The first school to benefit is the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School, which will receive a new shady spot, once sprinklers are put in there.

School committee members were delighted when Chase presented the two garden clubs' proposal to put in a sprinkling system and trees at the school without charge.

"We welcome your generous donation," said school committee member Kathy Ofsthun.

Norman said that the clubs plan to work on two front sections of the school, but they'll do one piece at a time.

"This year, we'll do the first 30 by 175 feet outside the front of the school to create shade there because it's so hot," she said.

Planting is expected to begin in late April, after the sprinkler system to support the new trees and ground cover is installed.

Chase has arranged for the sprinkler system to be put in at cost by the installer, Norman said.

After that, selected club members will visit a nursery in search of the four types of trees they have chosen for he sunny spot in front of the Osgood. But what they get will depend on the nursery's supply.

"It's sort of like a kitchen recipe," she explained. "We'll go to the store, but we may find they don't have all the ingredients."

The American Linden tree is the first pick of both groups, but they have other breeds that would work as well.

"We chose native, non-invasive trees that will work in that environment, rather than the normal trees that you see everywhere," said Pelletier. "Right now, the school is just a building sitting up on a rise and the trees will give it a pretty look and break that view."

The trees are expected to be about eight inches around and bobcats will be hired to plant them.

The entire project should take about three years, since a traffic study is ongoing at the shared driveway of the Deer Hill and Osgood schools.

"We don't want to put anything down that will need to be pulled up," Pelletier said.

COHASSET SPORTS

Lacrosse alumni playing in college

Special to the Mariner

For Matt Belson, the co-captain of the 1997 Cohasset varsity, the first defining moment of his collegiate career came a few games into his freshman season at Lafayette College, a Division One lacrosse school playing in the Patriot League. "I'd started all four years at Cohasset," remembered Belson, "and then I found myself not playing as a freshman at the beginning, and I was getting frustrated." With the Villanova game, however, that changed. "I stepped onto the field as a starter for the first time, and took in everything – the field, the lights, the fans. It was awesome."

For Ken Leahy, the Skippers' 1996 co-captain and among the top ten scorers in the state as a senior, the defining moment was – not surprisingly – scoring a goal. "It was the game-tying goal," elaborates Leahy, elected this year as co-captain of the Division One Providence College Friars as a junior, "in my first game as a freshman which completed my first career hat trick and led to an overtime victory over Marist College."

And for Jamie Buick, Cohasset's 1998 co-captain and the state's high scorer in 1997 as a junior, the collegiate moment that sticks out has been making the varsity roster of Ohio Wesleyan, the fifth-ranked team in the country in the NCAA's Division Three. Over the past five years, Cohasset lacrosse alumni have been entering the collegiate ranks with increasing regularity, and making their marks when they get there. The trend began with Leahy's older brother, David, who co-captained Cohasset in 1994 and then spent four years playing defense for the University of New Hampshire, as well as goalie Brandon DeVoe, defenseman Pete Collins and attackman Charlie Endris, who went to and played at Division Three Roanoke, Massachusetts Maritime (where Collins was captain his senior year) and Hamilton, respectively. Ben Redfield, the Skippers' 1995 co-captain, moved to the next level the following year, and starts his senior year at Division Three Roger Williams University as a returning All-Conference midfielder. The biggest surge occurred in 1997, when Belson, Jon Lacks (Providence) and Ely Kahn (Harvard University) all joined Division One programs, and Matt O'Connor began playing at Bryant College, which becomes an official NCAA Division Two program in 2000. !998 saw Buick and defenseman John Kasameyer add to the list, with Kasameyer making the varsity roster at Division One Lehigh University as a defenseman.

"I'd started all four years at Cohasset, and then I found myself not playing as a freshman at the beginning, and I was getting frustrated." With the Villanova game, however, that changed. "I stepped onto the field as a starter for the first time, and took in everything – the field, the lights, the fans. It was awesome."
MATT BELSON

All the alumni say that the difference between high school and college lacrosse is dramatic. "It became apparent to me on the first day of fall practice," said Ely Kahn, who lettered for the 12th-ranked Crimson as a backup freshman goalie in 1998 after co-captaining the Skippers to their 1997 Pilgrim Conference championship and earning All-Conference and Patriot-Ledger all-star honors. "Some of the guys started shooting on me, just testing me out. And the captain, who got named the Ivy League player of the year by the end of season, nailed me. I had no chance to react, and dropped to my knees in agony. The point is, the shot speed is so different. And that difference, the speed, is true in every other facet as well. You've got to be more precise in eveything. It takes a lot of

Junior lacrosse teams open with wins

After three weeks of rigorous practice, the Cohasset Under-12 Lacrosse program got off to a tremendous start April 11, with victories over teams from Hanover and Duxbury.

Cohasset White opened the day with a nip-and-tuck 10-6 win over a scrappy Hanover 1 team.

Jake Previte scored three of Cohasset's first four goals and assisted on the other, by midfielder Joey Durkin, as Cohasset pulled to a 4-3 lead. Aidan Buick then scored Cohasset's next three goals, first giving Cohasset a 5-4 edge before the half, then breaking a 5-5 tie and finally netting the eventual game-winner off a feed from Previte.

Previte, who scored five goals for all of 1998, matched that season-long performance against Hanover, sandwiching two more goals around an assist to Ned MacPherson, as Cohasset pulled away with a strong fourth quarter.

Chris Simms backstopped Cohasset to the win, picking up 11 saves, several in one-on-one situations while the game was in doubt.

Said Cohasset coach Chuck Jaffe, "Hanover was much bigger than we were, but our kids played a physical game and controlled play. This was anybody's game to win, and our

Under 14 author soccer success story

By Sallyann Chatterton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Here is a story about Cohasset soccer success — Cohasset's 14-and-under boys' soccer team finished a terrific indoor season by reaching the championship game at the South Shore Sport Center, only to lose in an overtime shootout to Braintree, 4-3.

Under the leadership of coaches Laurel Hickey and Bill Pestone, Cohasset finished in second place in the regular season, then beat Hingham in the tournament semi-finals, 5-3. In the championship game, Cohasset got goals from Robert Hickey, Chris Clark and Curt Kahn, and outstanding goal-keeping from Nick Spirito.

"The boys played great," said coach Hickey. "I'm very proud of each and every one of them."

Regular folk among the superstars

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE HARDMAN

There you were on Sunday.

As Jose Maria Olazabal tapped his putt in, you were right there, lining up your shot.

There you were yesterday in the batter's box, guessing that Brett Saberhagen was going to throw a curve.

That, of course, came after you received a pass from Dana Barros for lay up to finish off a fast break the other night against the Chicago Bulls.

You're also pretty busy these days preparing to play left-wing for the Bruins in the playoffs. After all, Pat Burns knows he can count on you.

Of course, you can't do that.

But, there is in one sporting event where you can line up with the best in the world and that's one of the things that makes the Boston Marathon a special event.

Uta Pippig or Ondoro Osoro or one of the other Keynan superstars are running the same course as Mary down the street or Joe up the road a bit.

You run the same 26 miles, 385 yards. You see the same crowds at Wellesley College or lining Heartbreak Hill.

Whether you cross the finish line in Boston in two or four hours, you receive an ovation. The winner's tape might have been torn to shreds hours earlier, but still there's the sign across the road that says finish line.

You can go home at night flip on the highlights and see the leaders charging through Cleveland Circle. You know how they feel because you were there too.

This is different.

Chances are you'll never know what it's like to hit a tee-shot towards the 18th hole at Augusta.

The Boston Marathon is the last of the regular guy events.

Sure, it isn't like the days of when the winner had to be back at work the next day, but you can bet a majority of the field will hobble into their jobs on Tuesday, telling their co-workers their marathon tales.

If they scan the newspaper on Tuesday, they'll be able to see their names in print. If they take a trip on the super information highway, they'll see their names on the countless number of web sites devoted to the marathon.

Try find those same names in a baseball box score sometime.

While the marathon is about the elite runners, it's also about people like Pembroke's Callie Frey, who is running for the Leukemia Society. It's about Rockland's Rich Ronan, who is raising money for the Spinal Cord Association. And it's about the countless of runners who make the trip to Boston for Dana Farber to raise money for cancer research. Cheer extra hard for these people.

It's about the runners, who run the roads of our town, rain or shine, to train for the marathon .

It's their chance to hit one over the Green Monster or dribble on the parquet.

That's what makes the Boston Marathon special.

Cohasset lacrosse alumni playing in college work, a lot of adjustment."

Jon Lacks, who scored his first NCAA goal last year against Canisius University, agrees, adding, "There is a much higher level of talent on the field. Also, a great deal of athleticism is required to play college ball. Another very significant difference is the time commitment college athletes must make to their sport."

"It's a faster and more physical game," notes Belson. "You can't be a 160-pound middie. You'll get bumped around. So you have to do more lifting and running than you ever did in high school." Even standing on the sidelines is different, says Belson. "There's never any time to mess around. There's always an assistant coach pushing you."

Another difference, says Leahy, is "the intensity that you have to play at." "The defensemen are stronger and faster than high school," observes Leahy, who scored 22 goals as a college freshman and 35 as a sophomore. "You can't afford to let up or make many mistakes. The goalies are a lot quicker with better skills."

We asked the several of the alumni what their fondest memories of playing for Cohasset High School had been.

Kahn: "What stands out most for me were the quality of my teams and teammates. Sure, we had some outstanding games. But the chemistry of our teams was so good that even our practices were great. I loved watching us develop as players, and I loved watching us develop meaningful rivalries with other towns."

Belson: "I loved playing with the older guys like Dave Leahy and Chuck Endris, when I was a freshman. That year, we won our first playoff game ever, beating Marblehead. In tenth grade, we had Tom Carmean, who was a great college and pro player, helping us. Coach Ekberg was special, and I'm glad I played for him. But the best had to be beating Hingham our senior year. We'd scrimmaged them when I was a freshman, and they'd laughed at us. It was redemption four years later."

Leahy: "My biggest memories of high school are the overtime win that we had against Sandwich my senior year. I fortunately had the game-tying goal and Andy Collins had the game winner in OT. Also, other memories were our battles with Weymouth in the state tournament, and when I broke the single-season goal-scoring record senior year."

Lacks: "It's simple. Winning the Conference and beating Hingham my senior year." Which leads to this final note.

"Cohasset has always had to struggle for respect," concludes Belson. "That's just the way it is. But I felt like we won a political victory last season. One of the guys in my league who played long-stick midfielder, which is my position, was Hanrahan from Hingham. He goes to Army now, and had been all-everything in high school. We'd never get mentioned in the Globe or the Herald. In college, though, he didn't get any votes for the all-star team. And I got selected to the Patriot League second team all-stars."

it."

In the second game, Cohasset Blue ran out to a big lead early and then held on for a 12-9 win over Duxbury 1.

Chris Barber scored both of Cohasset's first-quarter goals, one off a feed from Jon Grimm, as Cohasset gained a 2-1 first-quarter edge. Cohasset scored five unanswered goals in the second period, and had a 4-3 edge in the third quarter. Grimm and Sam Steele each scored three goals in that span, with Michael Martone netting two and Zach Markert one. Steele and Matt O'Connell picked up assists.

Goalie Lisa Spirito stopped nine shots in the nets through the first three quarters of the game, frustrating Duxbury while Cohasset poured it on.

But in the fourth quarter, fortunes changed. Duxbury controlled play and fired shot after shot on Mike Barnes, who took over for Spirito in the cage. Barnes came up with seven saves, most from point-blank range, and Grimm netted a late goal to seal the score at 12-9.

Grimm and Barber, like Previte for the Cohasset White team, matched their 1998 goal output in a single game.

Coach Jaffe noted that the Duxbury squad had already played one game, beating a team from perennial powerhouse Lincoln-Sudbury.

"That team knows it is good and that it can score goals," Jaffe said. "I think they were a little surprised by what we did offensively. Our kids really went at them and dominated early. We're going to work on playing four good quarters, though, because I shouldn't have to go through antacids while this team tries to protect a big lead."

Cohasset's two youth teams play next on April 25 at Deer Hill School, with the White team playing Marshfield at noon and the Blue team against Quincy at 1:30 p.m.

Who to cheer for

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Seventh-graders explore the history of their names

Project is part of celebrating diversity

My name means seriousness, solemnity

By Rachel Doyle

In Hebrew my name means female sheep. It means seriousness, it means solemnity. It is the number eight. A fiery red color. It is deep music-deep, flowing, peaceful music.

As the story of the Bible goes, Rachel was the wife of Jacob and the mother if Benjamin and Joseph.

It was my great-great grandmother's name and now it is mine. She gave me my name and My Hungarian blood, too.

My great-great grandmother. I would've liked to have known her. She came from Hungary. She came over by ship when she was a young teenager about fourteen years old. I think she and her family landed in Ellis Island.

I am also named after my mother's good friend. She was very well educated. She used to work at a bank, and after she became headmistress at Milton Academy and then Miss Porters School in Connecticut. She studied Spanish and became a translator and even wrote a book in Spanish! My mother really respects her. I took on her name, and I hope to accomplish some great things as she did.

At school they say my name crisply, as if the first syllable was shot out of a canon. But when my mother says my name, it's made of gentle and flowing melody.

I would not like to rename myself. Right now, Rachel is my identity. Maybe someday, if my identity of personality changes, I could be a Julie, Molly or Catherine.

My names means individual

By Alanna Hughes

In English my name means individual. In Gaelic my name means beautiful. It means passion, it means daydreamer. It is like the number one. It is the sweet melody of the flute, floating weightlessly and dancing through the air.

It was found in a baby book, thought the name was perfect for my parents' first-born daughter. It was Irish, like many relatives on my father's side of the family. My cousin Sheila and the mother-in-law of my dad's old roommate were Irish too, and they identified and recommended my name. It was a strong but soft, feminine, distinctive, and attractive.

Ireland. I would like to go there someday and learn more about my heritage. People tell me it is beautiful and mysterious place, so green because of all the rain it receives. Ferocious ocean surfs crash against the shores. I would like to visit the places my father did, where all his ancestors lived.

I was indirectly named after my father. Bruce Alan Hughes. I am proud to be named after him, a scholarly man with a good sense of humor. I have inherited his will to strive for perfection. His stubborness. His quick temper. I hope I have inherited his immense amount of intelligence.

At school they say my name harshly, as if fiery hot flames scorch the inside of their mouth when they repeat it. But in Gaelic my name is made of a cooler substance, like a breeze over the chilling Atlantic Ocean, unlike a common name such as Anne or Mary. It must get confusing, there are so many of them. But I am always unique Alanna.

I love my name, and I would never baptize myself under any other. Alanna fits me from the deep, secretive inside to the cheerful, happy-go-lucky outside. If I was forced to change, it would have to be something unusual like Amalia or Dominique. No. Alanna is special. Alanna is perfect.

My name means Saturn, the planet of rings

By Kayvon Tehranian

A descriptive paragraph on my name by Kayvon Tehranian

My name in English means Saturn, the planet of rings. In Farsi (the Iranian language) it also means Saturn. My name is conclusive and persuasive; it's sharp and intense. It means clever and quick. It reminds me of the number 77. A dark pine green. It is the music of an orchestra playing Beethoven's 5th, smooth, defiant and moving.

My name comes from the Persian language and my Iranian heritage. My parents spent 6 thought provoking months coming up with my name. My parents liked names that began with the letter K and they wanted an original name. They explored many names, but they liked the name Kayvon the best. My parents thought it is a strong and masculine name and it fit all the standards they set for a name. Kayvon is a true Persian name, not an Arabic name that many Iranians have. It was very important to my day who grew up in Iran that my name be truly Persian. He wanted his Persian heritage to live on and he also did not want the Tehranian family to be thought of as Arabic. He and his brothers have Arabic names and that is why he made sure my sister and I had Persian names.

At school they say my name lacking enthusiasm. They approach my name as if it was a tongue sore that did not want to be read. On the other hand, my Persian relatives say it with an Iranian accent making it roar with a certain zest. My sister also has a Persian name, however it is pronounced in the English form. I prefer my name Kayvon over the name Roxanne for two reasons (my name has more to do with the Persian culture and I think my name has a better sound to it.

Right now in my life I think the name Kayvon fits me and I like its originality, but if for any reason I needed to change it or wanted a new name there are a few I might choose. I would consider the names Jefferson or Kyle or even Thomas. Yeah, Thomas sounds nice.

In Hebrew, my name means princess

By Frannie Noble

In Hebrew my name means princess. It means sweet, it means bright. It is like a number seven. A flash of silver. It is the sonatinas played at Christmas recitals in the winter, never-ending songs, full of life.

It was my ancestor Sarah's name and now it is mine. More then 10 generations ago she traveled with her father to Connecticut to buy land. She was a traveler just like me. The story goes that she and her father went to Connecticut to start a new life. She was left alone with the Indians while her father went back to Massachusetts to get the rest of the family.

I would have like to know her. Unlike me, she had her whole life planned for her. She would grow up, marry and raise a family. After her experience with the Indians while her father went away there are not other records of her life.

At school, I am called Frannie. People say it awkwardly at first as though they had never heard it before. I Maine with family I am called Sarah. "Sarah Dear" by my grandmother. My name somehow means more when I'm in Maine. Probably because I am with family.

I have considered telling people to call me Sarah because it is my real name. At the same time Frannie is unique and Sarah is very common. I don't want to be like everyone else. I want something unique in there too. Yes, I will stick with the unique side of me.

Practical introduction to Christian faith

Alpha, a 10-session, practical introduction to the Christian faith for anyone who is interested in knowing more about Christian beliefs, will be offered weekly Wednesday evenings by St. Stephen's Episcopal, Beechwood Congregational, and South Shore Baptist Churches, at St. Stephen's, 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, beginning Wednesday, April 28, at 6 p.m. Supper will be served. For more information or to register for Alpha, you may call Jane Roach or Cliff Cutler at (781) 383-1083. There is no charge for the course or the supper.

Alpha includes a series of talks on "Who is Jesus?" "Why did Jesus die?" "Why and How Should I Read the Bible?" "Why and How Do I Pray?" "What About the Holy Spirit?" "How Can I Overcome Evil?" "Why and How Should I Tell Others?" "Does God Heal Today?" and "What About the Church?" After each talk there is a small-group time for everyone to discuss any questions or issues they have. Alpha is a place where no question is seen as too simple or too hostile.

'An Evening at the Manor' on stage this weekend

The royal family has sent out invitations to the upcoming "Evening at the Manor," and they are waiting for your response! Don't miss out on the antics of the court jester, the graceful steps of the court dancers (who will be inviting you to join them for one of the dances!) and the variety of period beverages served by the smiling wenches and portly Friar Bradford! Will a suitor be found for the spinster sister of Lord Richard, who is quite beyond marriageable age, but continues to hope for a miracle? Will there be a lady present pure enough to attract the Unicorn seen roaming the estate of late?

On Saturday and Sunday evenings, April 24 and 25, Upper Weld Hall at St. John's Church in Hingham will be transformed into the grand hall at Weld Manor, scene of the annual celebration marking the coming of May. As you sample the light fare supplied through the generosity of local markets and sip tantalizing mead, ale or sparkling cider, you'll be listening to the joyful singing coming from the four corners of the hall around you; surely you'll feel yourself transported to another time and place.

The concert marks the 20th Anniversary of The Unicorn Singers, directed by Margo Euler, and will also feature (as the after-"dinner" entertainment) a performance of their signature piece "The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore." This unusual madrigal ballet, fully staged by the Singers in '79 and '89, will be sung live as the audience receives a visual glimpse of the past via composite video.

Seating is at center tables of eight (@$25) and side tables of six (@$18) or you can elect to be guests of the royal family at the baronial center banquet table ($35). Call (781) 749-6561 now for your invitation/order blank, or you may pick one up in the foyer of the Hingham Public Library, at the Cohasset Library, Community Center in Cohasset (look on the bulletin board) or on the main counter at Nobles in Hingham Square (where you may also purchase tickets directly). Or mail your check to Unicorn Singers at 66 Lincoln St., Hingham 02043, and be sure to specify date desired. Unpaid reservations will be accepted by phone only on April 23 as space allows; no seating without advance reservation.

Contemporary Christian music

The Brockton Teen Challenge Choir, The Challengers, will present a program of contemporary Christian music and testimony at the Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St., Sunday, April 18, at 6:30 p.m. in the church sanctuary. The choir is composed of young men throughout the New England area. Come and hear the testimonies of young men who were bound by life-controlling problems such as drugs, crime and alcohol and have found freedom, new hope and new life in Jesus Christ! The choir brings an uplifting message in each and every song. Open to all ages and stages. All are invited and encouraged to attend this meaningful time of worship! A free will love offering will be collected. Call youth pastor Jason Genest for more information at (781) 383-0808.

Celebrating diversity in Cohasset

The Cohasset Diversity Committee invites you to come together to "Celebrate Diversity." This community-wide event will explore the issues and solutions to create an atmosphere of respect. Along with local and community guest speakers, we will also feature student essays and poems, a student art show, music, singing and Irish step dancing! This exciting and important event will take place at the Cohasset Town Hall Sunday, May 2, from 4 to 6 p.m. For more information, call Susan Etkind at 383-6602.

Tea party at library

The Friends of Cohasset Library presents an "Anne of Green Gables Tea Party" on Thurs., April 29, from 4-5 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Library. Come meet Anne and other cast members starring in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's upcoming musical production! Children in grades preK through 3 are welcome. Limited seating — please call the library at 383-1348 to reserve a seat.

Making dolls for charity

Sharing, Inc. was established to provide assistance to one of the poorest areas of our country, the Mississippi Delta region. Besides establishing health care centers and day care facilities, Sharing provides Christmas presents to children of the region.

The Sharing Doll Project helps by making dolls. These dolls are completely handmade. The doll was designed by a dollmaker in New Hampshire especially for the project. It takes at least 12 people to make a doll: first they are cut out, then the faces are painted, then the arms, legs, & bodies are sewn. The dolls are then stuffed, seams are closed, hair is applied and finally the dolls are ready to be dressed.

A group of Cohasset (and beyond) residents have had a wonderful time making clothes for 50+ dolls. More than 250 dolls will be distributed this Christmas. These individuals have worked at home and will gather for a Doll Tea Party on April 18th at the home of Carol Martin (45 North Main St.) to present their dolls. It is always difficult to part with a doll you have worked so hard to create, but knowing that it will be the only gift some little girl receives this Christmas makes it all worth while. This is the second year a group from Cohasset has participated in the Doll Project. If you are interested in helping out next year, please contact DeeDee Perry (383-9474).

Relay for life meeting

There will be a team captain meeting for the American Cancer Society's third annual Relay for Life held at Cohasset High School cafeteria on Thursday, April 15, at 6:30 p.m.

Don't miss out on the food, fun and excitement and learn more about becoming part of the Relay to take place at Cohasset High on May 21 and 22. Former and new team captains should attend. Please RSVP by April 8, by calling Shelly Donze (781) 383-9734 or Eileen Corbett (781) 383-6467.

Cohasset Recreation Commission Summer Playground Program

The Cohasset Recreation Commission announces that Martha Equi will again be the director of the Summer Playground Program for children ages 3 1/2 — 12 years. Registration will be held the week of June 14th.

The Recreation Commission said fee charges for the 1999 playground program remain the same as the 1998 program as follows: 5-12 year olds — $150 for first child, ($275 for non-residents), 3-5 year olds — $125 for first child. Discounts for second and subsequent children are $25. Activity fee - $45 for first child — $40 for second child and $35 for third and subsequent children mandatory, non-refundable activity fee separate from program fee.

Catholic Woman's Club brunch is May 2

Come to a bountiful brunch hosted by the Catholic Woman's Club of Hingham, May 2. Brunch will be served at 11 am and the menu includes egg casserole, chicken divan, Caesar salad, tasty ham slices, juices, coffee, tea and a scrumptious, but light dessert.

The setting is beautiful, picturesque, and charming.. Dining is at the Lightkeeper's House, Cohasset.. The cost is $20. All profits are directed towards the scholarship fund. Come bring a friend, a loved one, come alone, you'll be surrounded by lots of friendly people.. Sitting is limited, so don't miss out.. For further information and to purchase tickets call Lil Curley, 383-0695, or Nancy Roach, 383-0802.

Come to 'new' Consignment Shop

Register for prizes and come to the new Cohasset Consignment Shop at Tedeschi Plaza, Route 3A, to view a wide assortment of Brooks Bros. blue blazers, Bill Blass suits, silk cotton blouses by Ralph Lauren, Talbots, the Gap and Banana Republic, spring and summer clothing for children, infants, women, men and boys, as well as antique silver, mirrors, paintings, sterling jewelry, eclectic earrings and bracelets.

For June weddings there is a variety of silver bowls, pottery, antiques, oil paintings, dresses for the mother of the bride or guests, as well as pastel linen sport coats, spring and summer junior and women's suits; also running attire for the weight watchers. For the spring showers, there are classic raincoats as well as designer attire.

Chef of the Year has Cohasset connection

Chief Anthony Ambrose of Cohasset of Ambrosia on Huntington in Boston was recognized recently as U.S.A. Chef of the Year by the American Tasting Institute (a division of the Awards of America). Awards of America is a national organization dedicated to honoring excellence in diverse fields across North America. On March 29, Ambrosia was honored at the Twelfth Annual American Food and Beverage Awards at Carnegie Hall.

Chef Ambrose is known for his risk-taking, challenging use of conventional ingredients and integrating the unusual throughout his restaurant menu. He juxtaposes robust and sweet Asian spices with native New England seafood and game to produce a unique fusion cuisine. Ambrosia on Huntington has recently been cited by Food & Wine's 1998 Restaurant Poll as having some of Boston's "Most Creative Food." Bon Appetit named it one of Boston's best restaurants and it received three stars from the Boston Globe.

Poetry reading at Aisling Gallery

A poetry reading by Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill is Thursday, April 22, at 7:30 p.m. at Aisling Gallery, 229 Lincoln St.

Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill, an award-winning poet, is presently the Burns Library visiting professor at Boston College. She has also spent time as a visiting lecturer at New York University. These two experiences are not her only ones with higher education, for she taught English at the Middle East Technical University in Turkey. Nuala also has the recognition of being the first artist-in-residence at University College, Cork, where she received her education from University College, Cork. While there, she became involved with the "Innti" school of poets. Along with lecturing at colleges, Nuala spends her time as a regular broadcaster on radio and television. The awards she has received include the American Ireland Fund Literature Prize in 1991, as well as receiving The Irish American Foundation O'Shaughnessy Award in 1998.

Six-hour lighthouse cruise

The Quincy-based Boston Harbor Explorers just released tickets for the first of their popular "Lighthouse Cruise Extravaganza" to be offered this summer. Tickets are available now for the cruise to take place Sunday, June 6. The public is invited to set sail for the six-hour cruise showcasing 12 of North America's most legendary and historic lighthouses in North America.

The cruise departs from Rowes Wharf, Boston, at 10 a.m. and returns to Rowes Wharf at 4 p.m. Tickets are $30 adults, $26 seniors, $20 children. Call the Explorers at (617) 479-1871 for additional information.

Police made 14 arrests last month

March was a fairly active month for the police department. There were a total of 14 arrests. Two were for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol, two for Assault and Battery and two for Breaking and Entering in the Nighttime. Additionally, there was one arrest for Possession of a Class D Controlled Substance, one for Operating a Motor Vehicle after Suspension and one for an Alcohol Petition. Finally, there were four arrests for Outstanding Warrants, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

There was one Breaking and Entering reported, a business (cleared by an arrest), he said.

During the month, the department issued 194 Motor Vehicle Traffic Citations for fines totaling $8,540. Additionally, during March the department issued 17 parking violations for fines totaling $285.

During March, the Emergency Dispatch Center received 592 calls for service. Of those, 112 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

"The department again invites you to visit our new web site. We are adding to it daily, and think you will find it very interesting," Noonan said. (www.cohassetpd.org)

"We also ask residents to use our new Drug Tip Line if they have information they would like to share with the Police Department. The number is 383-9406," he said.

Schools to slash budget

Hope pro-override push will turn tide

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The school committee hopes that the resounding override defeat at the polls April 10 was partly due to voter confusion and apathy among parents — not taxpayer anger.

"There are no good cuts no fair cuts. The prospect of cutting makes you sick."
— School Committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo

"Clearly the message didn't get out the way it should have," school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said.

Stunned by the prospect of having to cut $450,000 from the school budget — which would occur, in a worst-case scenario — school committee members, teachers, parents and school administrators vented their concerns at the school board meeting last week.

The $766,000 Prop. 2-1/2 override, which would have balanced the town's FY2000 bud-

Roth mulls cable show

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Nan Roth may be gone from her seat on the board of selectmen, but she doesn't plan to stay far from town concerns.

That's why she's considering a cable show, possibly to be called Cohasset News.

"I'm exploring the idea of doing Cohasset News in the fall," she said. "I need to drum up six to eight volunteers who would be willing to train."

The half-hour show would be emceed by Roth, who plans to do segments from town hall, the schools and other Cohasset institutions, as well as a weekly interview with a citizen of note.

"It would sort of be like Wigmore Pierson's show, Pierson to Person, but with a news com-

Voters to get override smorgasbord

Special election is May 22

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

After a grueling three-hour meeting Tuesday, town officials hammered out a smorgasbord of Prop. 2-1/2 override options that will be put to voters at a special election May 22.

The tri-board meeting that included selectmen, the school and advisory committees followed in the wake of the April 10 override defeat creating a deficit of some $766,000 in the proposed fiscal year 2000 budget.

Under state law, the town must have a balanced budget before it can set the tax rate and the tax collector can send out the bills.

Although they could not agree on a single override figure, there was a consensus among the boards that taxpayers might support a lower tax hike than the one resulting from a $766,000 override.

Agreement on that point was not reached without considerable quarreling among selectmen and between selectmen and the school committee and advisors. Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown had his hands full maintaining civility in the cramped selectmen's quarters.

"This board has to make a decision, we need what the final numbers are going to be and not the nitty-gritty of the budgets," Brown said, banging the gavel to bring order back after wrangling over the school budget had occurred in the audience.

At one point F. Roy Fitzsimmons of Doane Street, who opposed the $766,000 override, accused the school department of being top heavy with administrators especially at the high school.

That prompted Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey to respond that cutting the assistant principal at the middle-high school would be "mindless" in light of the school's outstanding academic reputation and with reaccreditation on the horizon.

"I object to the comment 'mindless,'"

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Board sends its condolences

Selectmen sent their long-time secretary Joyce Studley their deep regrets this week over the death of her husband, John H. Studley. Mr. Studley served as Hingham town clerk for many years. For obituary, see page 24.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, April 27.

May 1 deadline to license dogs

Animal Control officer Paul Murphy said that dog owners should heed the May 1 licensing deadline.

Licenses for spayed/neutered dogs is $8 and the cost for unspayed/neutered dogs is $15.

Pet owners who do not meet the May 1 licensing deadline will have to pay an additional $25, along with the initial license fee.

The town clerk will need proof of the pet's rabies vaccination..

Feral cats in James Lane area

The board of health is reducing the feral cat population in the James Lane area in a two-week campaign that will end during the week of April 26.

Animal control officer Paul Murphy will use humane traps to lure and hold the cats, which pose a nuisance and public health threat. That's because rabies in raccoons has been a problem in Massachusetts, and rabies can be spread to feral cats.

Cat owners in and around the James Lane area should keep their pets indoors through April 26.

A collar with identification should be put on a cat if it must go out so that it can be returned to its owner.

The health board is also asking for people to feed their pets indoors and not leave food outside that might attract feral cats.

Call Paul Murphy at 383-9119 for more information.

Selectmen to discuss raising recycling sticker fees

Town manager Mark Haddad and the Recycling Committee are proposing a plan to raise sticker fees for the Recycling Transfer Facility from the current price of $65 to $80.

All citizens are welcome to attend the discussion of the proposal at 8:30 p.m., April 27, during the selectmen's meeting. Tipping fees which the town pays to SEMASS are now $4.69 a ton, Haddad said.

Earlier meeting time vetoed

Town manager Mark Haddad asked selectmen to consider meeting at 7 p.m., instead of the usual 7:30 p.m. He said that routine business items could be discussed at 7 p.m. and agenda items could be taken up at 7:30 p.m.

Haddad argued that the earlier start would remedy the lateness of some of the meetings.

Selectmen did not approve Haddad's recommendation because it would be difficult to some members who work out of town, to get there in time.

Pratt possible Fence Viewer

Whether or not Glenn Pratt becomes the town's next Fence Viewer will depend on whether the town has a limit on the number of people allowed to hold the position at one time.

Pratt wrote to selectmen to request to fill one of the two terms set to expire this year. Grace Donohue and Kathryn Dunn currently serve as Fence Viewers for the town.

The position calls for someone to review property disputes, check fences and make sure that town lines "don't move," explained selectmen chairman Merle Brown.

Pratt has served on a number of boards in town over the last 30 years.

Lehr is top recycler

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown announced this week that Arthur Lehr, chairman of the recycling committee, was named recycler of the year by MASSPIRG, a public advocacy organization.

Road to recovery

Legislation could drive how growing roadside memorials are handled

By Constance Pittman Lindner
SPECIAL TO THE NEWS

Eric hadn't been gone for even a day when his father noticed the butterfly in the yard.

"We're not superstitious, but my husband suddenly remembered hearing that butterflies signal a soul's departure," said Barbara Melanson of Hingham, Eric's mother. "There was the butterfly in the yard, and then, my brother photographed Eric on his last visit with him, fishing—and there was a beautiful butterfly just behind his head. Butterflies are sort of symbolic for us now. That's why my sister hung her silver butterfly bracelet on Eric's memorial."

It is the small things that sometimes give grieving friends and relatives the most comfort during a time of loss, like the roadside memorial that appeared — like so many others on the South Shore and across the nation — within hours of Eric's passing in June 1997.

There has been a lot of attention paid to these memorials as of late, especially at this time of year with tragedies invariably reported around graduation and prom seasons. There is even pending legislation at the Statehouse to put some rules in place which would govern and restrict roadside memorials.

But many believe the memorials provide an opportunity for those who are feeling the pain and loss to express their overwhelming grief. Creating these memorials have become particularly important to teens and those younger, who lose a friend and want to share their grief. Many of them are experiencing a loss for the first time.

With these roadside memorials come many mourners — especially teens — trying to find some way to come to terms with their loss and have a chance to say goodbye where the person spent his last seconds. But with those crowds come added issues, such as resentment from property owners near the memorial, safety issues due to drivers slowing down to get a closer look at the memorials, and teens spilling out onto the road in the midst of their sorrow.

The local legislation would put more defined rules to the ad hoc memorials that are springing up and look to address some of these issues.

"I got involved after I heard about a group of young girls who were crossing a section of a road to visit a shrine and were almost hit themselves," said State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth. "There has been concern expressed by some public safety officials on the South Shore that the memorials are a distraction that draw people to the site, which is usually a dangerous spot to begin with."

"There has been concern expressed by some public safety officials on the South Shore that the memorials are a distraction that draw people to the site, which is usually a dangerous spot to begin with."

— State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund

Hedlund has proposed legislation which would regulate the placement, construction and duration of roadside memorials. The bill has referred to the Committee on Transportation, but a hearing date has not yet been set. He has been joined in his petition by State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

"I co-sponsored the bill because I can understand how the families feel, though I haven't been in their place," said Murray. "With the state looking at this and saying we don't want anything at all, I thought to be fair and caring about the people who have lost loved ones, that there should be something that could be done for them."

Here on the South Shore, a number of roadside memorials have sprouted up in the past year alone. Pembroke residents Erin and Allison Darling and Colleen Clancy died last September on a rain-slicked road in Pembroke as they headed to school at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham. Within hours, teens flocked to the area with cards, pictures and mementos to remember and celebrate how the girls lived. A similar scene played out last June at the spot where Cohasset teen Bourke Corcoran was killed in a car accident just days before his graduation from Cohasset High School.

Joseph Monroe of Pembroke and town selectmen got into a conflict over his desire to maintain a roadside memorial honoring his son.

For the young people who flock to the sites, the memorial helps with the immediacy of the emotional impact following the accident which needs expression before the funeral.

"About two years ago my friend Jay Leone passed away," said Cory Tromblee of Hanover. "He crashed into a tree and was killed; not even in his mid-twenties. Jay had a lot of friends and was one of those people who everyone manages to consider a 'best friend', largely because he was a great person—no frills. And along with many others, I considered him a best friend and an important person in my life.

Tromblee said he and his friends have talked about the memorial, especially given the recent debates about them, and are certain it was helpful to them at the time.

"We thought that these roadside memorials are a very good outlet for a grief that often times doesn't know how to come out, and in many cases is a first lesson in coping with death," he said. "It seems to me that roadside memorials allow people to face the tragedy and offer something which can symbolize or embody their relationship to the deceased. At Jay's memorial these 'objects' (fishing lures, soccer balls, pictures, poems) all adorned the tree. After a while the memorial was removed, and the things that had been left there were moved to the cemetery, where people still leave things for Jay."

Memorials sometimes involve placing flowers, stuffed animals and other comforting offerings at places the person used to frequent; most notably the tributes to the late Princess Diana found at the accident site in Paris and at Buckingham Palace's gates in London.

Here on the South Shore, the issue led to a

Lily Pond override squeaks by

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The $1.3 million override to help pay for the Lily Pond sewer project squeaked by with a two-vote margin in the April 10 election.

"If one person had changed his mind, it wouldn't have passed," marveled former sewer commissioner Ted Guild. Under state law, overrides require a simple majority.

Guild explained that the project would have been authorized, even if the override had not passed. In that scenario, owners of the 24 homes around Lily Pond set for connection to the town sewer would have paid the entire cost back through betterments. Instead, taxpayers will cover half the cost for the project, which will add an additional 3 cents to the tax rate.

That means that the average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will pay $11.31 a year. The tax increase will go away once the 20-year bond issue is paid off.

Guild said that the main challenge now is getting everything under contract.

Lily Pond was added to the collection system due to concerns about the water supply there. An Oct., 1998 court order led to its inclusion in the central Cohasset sewer project.

Lily Pond is set to come on line simultaneously with the rest of the central sewer project, which will involve 700 new connections, and the north Cohasset sewer project, which will add 270 new connections.

The latest date for all three sewer projects to be completed will be June 30, 2000, said Guild.

ponent," Roth said.

Roth visited with Deborah Boudreau, access coordinator for MediaOne, on Tuesday.

"We sat down and talked about a show and what she wants to do, and the meeting went very well," said Boudreau. "Nan wanted an overview of what's involved in putting a show together. She's very interested and highly motivated—I think she'll do great."

Boudreau agrees with Roth's assessment that Cohasset doesn't have much in the way of cable programming about local news.

Roth was given a studio tour and discussed the option of field work—taking the cameras out to the public, rather than making guests come to the studio. The segments could be edited later.

"As her ideas progress, we'll put it all together," said Boudreau. "I think it's a great idea and it's something that is really needed in Cohasset."

Roth, who is a special education teacher with the Braintree public schools, thinks that the show will fill in a vacuum created when Pierson's 10-year-long show came to an end in June 1997.

"There's nothing on cable for Cohasset now, and there's been inadequate coverage of hearings, elections — anything of interest to people in town," she said.

Town manager Mark Haddad is in favor of Roth's plans.

"I think it's a great idea because it's important to get the news out to people," he said. "The selectmen's meeting is one of the most watched shows on Cable 3 now. That shows that people are clearly interested in what's going on here in town."

Haddad said that he let Roth know she could count on him, as well as the board of selectmen, to help in anyway they can.

"Nan has a good grasp of the issues," he said. "She'll be good at this."

While Roth does not have any prior media background, she said that MediaOne told her they train people for this.

Two bidders vie for Independence Building

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Two of the six bidders for the Independence Building are running neck and neck, so to speak, to gain ownership of the historic property on South [illegible] that has housed the town jail, gown museum and teen center over its 149 years.

Former Cohasset residents Thomas and Lauren Koncius, owners of the real estate appraisal and consulting firm Atlantic Valuations Group, would like to move from their current office at 9 Depot Ct. (once the town's post office) to the building around the corner.

Also looking to make a short-distance move is Kelly Kalus, owner of Clay Strokes, a ceramics business on South Main Street, which sits directly across from the Independence Building.

The Koncius' bid of $100,100 came in at only $2,100 higher than Kalus' $98,000, which prompted at least one selectman to call for an April 27 meeting with the two parties to discuss what they intend to do with the property.

The sudden flurry of offers came after town manager Mark Haddad withdrew a previous bid request asking for a $100,100 minimum for the property. Other than the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, which offered a nominal sum to facilitate its plans to transform the building into a public restroom with rented office space on the second floor, there were no takers.

Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Chamber and chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, argued that the village area needed such a facility and said that a public restroom would encourage visitors to spend more time in the area's shops.

Haddad opened the new bid request last Thursday with no set asking price or stated intended use for the building. The bids ranged from $100,100 to $15,500.

Kalus, who describes Clay Strokes as a "drop in, walk-in" paint-your-own pottery studio, is currently leasing a space at 21 South Main St.

In a recent letter to the Mariner, Kalus said that her lower bid price mattered less than the benefit her ownership of the Independence Building would be to the town.

She pointed out that the selectmen reserve the right to accept or reject any bid deemed to be in the best interest of the town. She also noted that she hosts more than 20 birthday parties for children each month, serve as a meeting place for children ages eight- to 16-years and serve as a place of employment for teens and mothers.

"As a Cohasset resident and mother of two teens, I am passionate about the idea of 'drop in' art activities for children, as well as keeping my business in the village," she wrote.

The Independence Building has a rich history. It served as the town's first police station, evidenced in the two small jail cells still inside. The building also served as a gown museum for the Cohasset Historical Society, once the building was vacated by officers who moved to the present police-fire station on Elm Street.

The building most recently housed the town's Teen Center.

Selectmen received permission at town meeting to sell the building, once renovations began at the former DPW garage for a new teen center.

This is not the first time that two interested parties have vied for the building.

A local lawyer who wanted the space for his legal office suffered through a lengthy court battle with a resident interested in having the building set aside for affordable housing. The case was eventually dismissed.

The Konciuses are hoping that their bid will prove the winner.

"We're aware of the fact that the selectmen want to meet with the two highest bidders, though I'm not sure why," said Thomas Koncius. "We heard it was on the market, we made a bid and we are the highest bidder. My understanding is that the bid request said that the building would go to the highest bidder and I'm hopeful that that will be the outcome."

It will if Haddad can sway selectmen at the next meeting.

"Take the building as is and comply with zoning — are the only requirements I put forth," said Haddad. "That's why I recommended to selectmen that we accept the highest bid. I don't care if the highest bid came in at $5. In fairness, we should stick to our stated requirement and go with the highest bid."

ALTERNATIVE OR COMPLEMENTARY?
First, a 1991 survey awakened the healthcare community to the fact that 36.3% of respondents indicated they had visited an alternative provider in 1990. Now, a recent survey indicates that the probability of an alternative care user seeing an alternative practitioner had increased to 46.3% in 1997. Just as important, Americans made 628,825,000 visits to alternative care providers in 1997, while visits to all primary care physicians totaled 385,919,000. In the past year alone, the percentage of the population that used chiropractic has risen from 10.1% to 11%. These numbers beg the question: Which is the alternative form of therapy? This issue may best be addressed by considering chiropractic and other non-medical therapies as "complementary" (rather than alternative) therapies.

On the road to recovery compromise between Joseph Munroe of Pembroke and town selectmen and police, who had a conflict over Munroe's desire to maintain the roadside memorial on Barker Street honoring his first-born, Joseph Munroe Jr. Munroe expressed at that time that if his son's memorial had to come down, so too should the one placed on Route 3 in Kingston in remembrance of Mark Charbonnier, the state police trooper who was shot in the line of duty four years earlier.

But after meeting with Lt. Willard Boulter and special police officer Bob Rice in early November last year, Monroe removed the cross from Barker Street where students from Silver Lake High School had planted it only days before.

Lt. Boulter proposed a memorial to serve all young victims of fatal accidents in Pembroke, which was approved by selectmen to be placed on a large boulder behind the Boy's Club building.

"It's time to address this issue, and many communities are addressing this on their own," said Hedlund. "I know that Hingham plans on putting in place a bylaw that would govern roadside memorials. The bill I'm hoping to pass would set a time limit on the placement of these sites, and it would also mean that Mass Highway will promulgate some standards as to how the memorials are constructed."

That sounds sensible to Peggy Weymouth of Hingham, whose front lawn was the scene of a vehicular accident that left a teenage boy in a nursing home for months before he died from his injuries.

"He obviously never recovered from the accident," she said. "Even though it's been 20 years since he crashed into a tree on my lawn, I sometimes remember the moment when I'm mowing over the spot." (The DPW removed the tree some time after the accident.)

Weymouth, who sits on the Hingham Cemetery Committee and has recently been in charge of selling graves, is well aware of how sensitive issues surrounding loss can be.

"Family members want a place to go where they can do whatever, say whatever they need to feel like they're connecting with the deceased," she explained. "I would think memorials sober kids as a reminder that a teenager died there. It's a very complicated thing. If there is a limit put on it, it seems to me that that would be a good idea so people know they have a certain amount of time to deal with their grief. But I don't know how I would feel if there were a cross just off my property or mourners."

Neighbors to a High Street memorial in Hingham were certain how they felt about the issue, and so they cleared the site and sent it to the funeral home to be returned to the family.

The Melansons were not as fortunate.

"On the 15th of each month, I would put a rose there and my sister would put carnations, but they took Eric's stuff away from the tree two days before Thanksgiving," said Melanson. "It's very hurtful to us that someone took his things and won't give them back. My sister's silver butterfly bracelet—it was ripped off the tree and each link was ripped apart. There's nothing we can do to show him our love now except for placing a flower, but even when I leave a rose there, someone takes it away. We always kept it small and never meant to offend anyone."

Hedlund is hoping that the clearer rules that will come of his legislation will prevent neighbors to memorial sites from taking matters into their own hands.

"That seems a little bit much, to go out and remove a single rose," he said.

What the bill will do

If enacted, the proposed legislation (Senate Bill 1674) bill would:

- Allow cities and towns to adopt local guidelines and ordinances relative to the establishment and removal of roadside memorial shrines on local roadways.
- Direct the Massachusetts Highway Department to amend its manual on uniform traffic control devices no later than July 1, 1999 by addition of a section pertinent to the regulation and establishment of roadside memorials on state owned roads.
- Any such regulations shall provide that erection of memorials:

Require the consent and approval of the officer responsible for safety on the public roadway on which said memorial is located.

Require such regulating authority to maximize the safety of those erecting visiting, and passing said memorials.

Provide for temporary measures to meet minimum safety standards.

Establish a time frame for the dilution of said memorial no greater than forty-five (45) days after the date of the event being memorialized and not greater than thirty (30) days after the establishment of the memorial.

CHM pilings to go in

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset Harbor Marina owner Paul Trendowicz said that he has no choice but to put in the pilings which arrived at his Parker Avenue property last week.

In an April 16 phone call to town manager Mark Haddad, Trendowicz explained that he could not change his plans at this time, mostly due to timing and scheduling issues.

Construction was set to begin on the marina on April 20, which is the main reason Trendowicz decided to go ahead with putting in the pilings at his marina.

This news comes several weeks after the board of selectmen broke off discussions about contacting the Army Corp of Engineers to gain a reprieve on the pilings, which are considered less desirable from an aesthetic standpoint than bottom-anchored floats.

That occurred when a group of town residents opposed to Trendowicz's plans visited selectmen with a number of alleged violations connected to the marina that they had researched; a discussion of which dominated the rest of the selectmen's meeting.

Selectmen put a hold on contacting the Army Corps, explained selectman Ronnie McMorris, to focus on the concerns the group raised.

The board of selectmen were again confronted by several members of the group of residents opposed to Trendowicz's expansion plans last week, who announced that pilings had arrived at the marina on April 14.

A member of the group also challenged the Mariner's use of the word "group" to describe the residents opposed to Trendowicz's expansion plans.

"We're not a group, but 200 or more people who are against this," he said.

After some heated discussion about why correspondence with the Army Corps of Engineers concerning the pilings was waylaid, town manager Mark Haddad said that he would contact the Corps and ask to have the pilings put on hold.

However, Haddad received a call from Trendowicz the following day, as well as a letter, explaining that the

Elm Street housing will gain from state funding

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's Elm Street public housing should be in for some long-needed repairs, now that it will receive $27,500 in grant monies from the state.

The Department of Housing and Community Development said that $92 million will be distributed through 131 communities over the next five to seven years, with Plymouth, Marshfield, Hingham and Norwell the big winners (with $427,500, $161,000, $135,00 and $128,000 respectively).

"We put in for these grants all the time," said John Muncey, chairman of the Cohasset Housing Authority. "You put in for one April 1, but may not hear anything for months."

Muncey said that the last grant the housing authority received was $99,000 for a fire system upgrade.

It was Fire Chief Roger Lincoln's letter to the state about the housing complex's obsolete fire system that brought back the funds needed to replace it.

"Right now, we've still got balconies, stairs and other things that need repair," Muncey said.

But it's the walkways, and the elderly residents who traverse them, that will reap the rewards of the new funds, said Marilyn LeBlanc, executive director of the Cohasset Housing Authority.

"I would love to catch the person who designed these walkways," she said. "The thought that elderly people with motility problems are supposed to walk them is unbelievable. Right now, the residents hold on to the pipe railings and stay on the grass. Many of them have knee and hip problems. The incline was so great originally that there were a lot of injuries."

Apparently, the problem worsened when someone decided to spruce up the place and painted the walkways blue, which only made the surface slicker.

"Right now, we've still got balconies, stairs and other things that need repair," JOHN MUNCEY, CHAIRMAN OF THE COHASSET HOUSING AUTHORITY

"I don't think that there was as much concern for the future then," she said. "They were focused on the immediate and not looking at the long-term results."

The list of needed repairs for the Elm Street housing complex is a lengthy one.

In 1998, a comprehensive study by architect Bruce Wood of Strekalovsky and Hoit of Hingham found that the housing complex's decks needed replacement.

"We received an additional $145,000 to replace all those decks, but that hasn't been contracted yet," said LeBlanc.

LeBlanc said that she requested hall heaters on March 15 of 1994—a request whose status is still pending.

A requisition for money to repair decks and walls in October of '95 was finally awarded in '97 with $30,000. That money enabled the Housing Authority to replace six decks.

The Elm Street housing is an all-electric complex since 1994, which racks up $80,000 in utility bills.

"I wrote to the state that we wanted to convert to gas," she said.

LeBlanc has also requested water-saving toilets because the housing complex's water and sewer costs have doubled since water meters were put in about two or three years ago.

In the last year and a half, the Housing Authority has had to replace 12 water heaters that had passed their prime.

"Everything is going on us," said LeBlanc.

Keeping track of requests and sometimes year-long waits between responses is part of LeBlanc's job.

"Nothing goes easily," she said. "The $27,500 we're getting now is not an additional grant, but just part of the $90,000 we needed for the walkways. They just funded it in two separate fiscal years."

Muncey, too, finds the funding delays frustrating.

"Sometimes we don't even hear that we're receiving money until the press calls to ask us about it," he said. "Everyone else knows before we do."

pilings would go in.

Trendowicz's letter stated that the boating season beings in May and his goal is to allow his customers full use of a functioning marina.

He also said that he had attempted to expand CHM for the past three years "in an open manner with all appropriate parties" and in full compliance with existing permits and necessary approvals.

Several weeks ago, the residents opposed to Trendowicz's expansion plans charged that Haddad, as well as selectmen McMorris and Diane Sullivan, were in violation of the open meeting law because they had been meeting with Trendowicz for private discussion to prevent litigation.

Haddad reported back to selectmen the following week that town counsel had reviewed the matter, and found that the minutes of the board of selectmen's meetings showed only that Haddad had referred to the informal group as a subcommittee, but no vote had been taken by selectmen to designate the group an official subcommittee. For that reason, the meetings were deemed not to be in violation of the open meeting law.

Haddad said that he would refrain from referring to the three-member group as a subcommittee.

In his letter to Haddad, Trendowicz described his three years of negotiations with the town as "arduous, at best," and wrote that as a Cohasset business owner and resident, he was disappointed with the breakdown of negotiations with selectmen and their inability to render a decision concerning CHM's expansion in a timely fashion.

Trendowicz said that he had explored options other than the installation of pilings, but found that (bottom-anchored) moorings would be unrealistic from an engineering and economic standpoint.

Selectmen plan to meet with the planning board on marina issues on April 28.

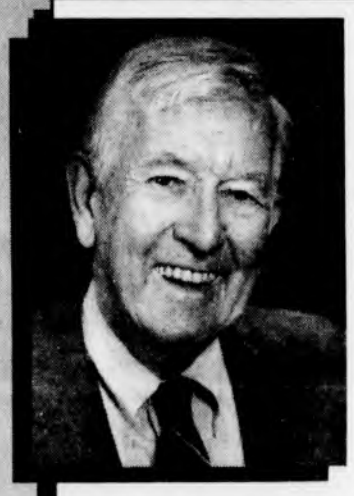
Thanks for thinking of us first!


Dear customers and friends:
In a recent Vancouver-Washington based survey of households throughout Southeastern Massachusetts, people were asked the following question. "When you think of a Realtor, who do you think of first?" The number one answer was Jack Conway.
The survey called it "TOMA"*–Top of Mind Awareness, and like Crest for toothpaste, and Campbells for soup, Conway has it for real estate.
I guess that means we've done something right in this business for the past 41 years.
Thanks folks, and when you're buying or selling real estate, we hope you'll continue to think of us first.
Sincerely,
Jack Conway

NEWS FROM NEWPORT

Here is some news from Newport! Nichole Santoro, a sophomore majoring in elementary education and child psychology at Salve Regina University, once again — has been inducted into Sigma Phi Sigma Honor Society for her outstanding GPA, community service and volunteer work. Nichole is working hard as a resident assistant at Miley Hall. She has been a peer councilor, mentor and spokeswoman for Salve Regina University.

Nichole's parents are Charlie and Andrea Santoro and they are ever-so-proud of her! (They send you a 1-4-3, Nichole).

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

The South Shore Art Center was in the spotlight recently, literally! Its current exhibition, "Uncommon Perspectives," was showcased as a short calendar segment on WGBH-TV Channel 2's Greater Boston Arts. The spot included excerpts from interviews with artist Magdalena Campos-Pons and exhibition curator Nancy Cusack.

Greater Boston Arts is a series of monthly specials devoted exclusively to the wealth of artistic creation in eastern Massachusetts. Shot entirely on location, the series canvases the extraordinary diversity of the area's local culture from major museum to rehearsal hall, from community fine arts center to downtown theater district It combs the area for stories that are important, unusual and immediate. The series' central goal is to build audiences for the arts: every segment, regardless of topic or approach, directs viewers to something currently happening in the Boston area.

The show has already aired, the reviews are in and it was deemed an unqualified success!! And, we're sure it will bring lots of people to the center's latest exhibition.

COLLEGE ACCEPTANCE

William Kearney, president of the Student Council and a member of the senior class, has just learned that he will be going to the University of Richmond in the fall! Joan (his proud mom) and Jack Conte of Forest Avenue are very pleased and proud of him, as are we all!

HATS OFF TO FRANEY!

There is one reason a lot of people don't want the current school year to end at Cohasset High School and his name is Jim Franey, a teacher extraordinaire! All of us who ever had the pleasure of being in his classes, cannot say enough good things about Jim, he's the best!! He's bright, he's fair, he's funny, he's serious — we could go on and on! Everyone learns from Mr. Franey!

For all of the hearts you have touched and all of the minds you helped build, we thank you!

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Happy birthday greetings go to Tommy Coburn this week; hope your day was an especially happy fun-filled one!

An override menu

In the weeks ahead, you'll be hearing a lot about number crunching. The town manager in conjunction with the selectmen, the advisory committee and school committee will be coming up with recommended budget cuts under three different override scenarios.

Contrary to what some town officials say, we don't believe voters were confused about the $766,000 override on the April 10 ballot. Nearly 60 percent of those who voted sent a resounding message to town hall that that much of a tax hike is not palatable.

That being said, however, the new menu of overrides is confusing. So it is up to all of us to educate ourselves through the newspapers, attending town meeting and asking questions so we can cast an educated vote at the special election May 22.

The drubbing the override took at the polls April 10 seemed to catch our town officials off guard. They are now grappling with slates of cuts, which get deeper depending, on which override — if any — voters are likely to approve.

This time around, the school committee and selectmen say they will make sure voters understand what services and programs will be slashed before they go to the polls.

Once we get through this hurdle, we urge selectmen and the school committee to heed advisory committee chairman Dick Avery's advice.

The town has to put everything on the table and see if there is another way to conduct its business.

Everything from regionalization of some services to looking at user fees to examining the age-old practice of guaranteed step increases in addition to salary hikes for employees should be investigated.

We also support Selectman Tom Callahan's efforts through a petition drive to get more state and federal funding for education.

The town only has so much money to work with. The town's small commercial tax base means the lion's share of the burden falls on homeowners, some of whom are frightened by the increasing tax rate. Under state law, the town cannot raise taxes more than 2-1/2 percent a year without an override. Town Manager Mark Haddad says even if an override passes this year, we could all be back here again in a year or two because of the structural problems in the budget.

Parade of Little League Champions

TO THE EDITOR:

You can have your beautiful homes along Jerusalem Road overlooking the Atlantic Ocean. Or, tell me about how peaceful it is in the harbor at sunrise on a clear June morning. I'll agree with you, when you tell me that the duck pond on the common is something to behold. But, those examples of Cohasset's beauty pale in comparison to the splendor and pride of our tiny little town when the Little League Baseball opens their 1999 season with a parade down Main Street.

On May 1, players from four separate divisions, will line up in mass confusion in the parking lot adjacent to The Red Lion Inn, to march through the center of town along the same path used 47 years ago when the Little League was formed in Cohasset. As tradition has held, this year's parade will be led by Glenn Pratt's antique fire engine, carrying 12 young, smiling Little Leaguers and their coaches from last year's 1998 Little League Champions - the Pirates.

One by one, 26 teams will gather, march and often stumble their way in a colorful rainbow of brand-new jerseys and baseball caps to the Little League field west of the common. Cameras will click, friendships will be renewed and youthful memories revisited, as proud parents, siblings, grandparents and neighbors watch the parade wind through the village. Once there, like so many jelly beans, the children of Cohasset representing 275 very excited families, will break ranks and spill out onto the carefully manicured, emerald green grass of Barnes Little League Field. Festivities will be kicked-off with the Star-Spangled Banner played by the Deer hill Band, followed by our own Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, throwing out ceremonial the first pitch.

Baseball will forever be America's game. We all have memories when our fathers or mothers took us in the back yard to throw the baseball around. We still remember the awe-inspiring look of the diamond at Fenway Park during our first Major League game. There is just something special about the feel of that baseball in the palm of your hand or the smell of leather in that old baseball glove. But for our children, in this tiny little village that we call Cohasset, their memories begin here on opening day of the 1999 Little League season.

The CYBA (Cohasset Youth Baseball Association) has worked very hard on this year's parade. As part of the ceremony, the league will also be honoring last year's summer all-star 11-year old squad that won the District 8 Little League Championship. Come and cheer our Little Leaguers on, make it a day that we all can remember!

Voters were misinformed

TO THE EDITOR:

What a misinformed statement came out of Cohasset's referendum vote this past week! Certainly, everyone has a right and a responsibility to vote for what they think best portrays their own thoughts. It's not difference in opinion that is troublesome, but the clear picture that the voters were not well informed.

People are already pointing fingers, but that's a dead end, and certainly will do nothing to restore faith in this process. What this "No" vote on the override does is further highlight the deep split that has arisen in our town since the much argued and fought over new school was voted in, and the taxes that go with that.

But . . . it's starting to sound like sour grapes coming from the Taxpayers' Group. When we, as a voting body, are asked to fund an increase in the school budget which would barely cover the costs of maintaining the current number of courses, teachers, school maintenance, and special programs for the students . . . and we say no, we take a turn, and head down the road recently traveled by the town of Hull . . . No sports, No Arts, No Music and no Pride.

Did the school department ask for new teachers to teach foreign languages at the Deer Hill level (which . . . is mandated by the state frameworks governing so many changes in the schools), or did they seek a huge increase to actually bring the school buildings up to code (another mandated item needed), or did they ask to bring our teachers' salaries up to the number one position on the South

Steeple, town clock to be restored

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The First Parish Meeting House's steeple—and the town clock that faces out on all four sides—are in for a facelift.

The Burgess Company of Pembroke, steeple and tower specialists since 1912, has estimated $9,050 worth of work on the steeple (built in 1791 by Caleb Nichols) and about $4,700 worth of restoration for the clock (an Edward Howard creation from the mid-1850s).

Rod Hobson, chairman of maintenance committee of First Parish, went before selectmen earlier this month to remind them that the clock on the steeple is actually town property.

Town manager Mark Haddad told Hobson that money from the recent sale of fire call boxes, which netted nearly $5,000, could cover the cost of the restoration estimate for the town clock.

The repairs for the clock would cover the repair of moldings, painting the four dials and applying gold leaf to the clock hands, as well as the numerals and minute markers.

"I got the sense from selectmen that they would pay for the clock," said Hobson. "I will go up there with Noel Ripley, who is the keeper of the town clock, when the staging is up for the steeple repairs to see where it makes sense to pay our money. Then we'll all stand around with our hands in our pockets and decide what to do. At this point, I've only surveyed the steeple and clock with a binocular."

Funding for the project will probably come from some pocket of money set aside for building maintenance.

The precise pocket from which the funds will come will be decided at a May 19 meeting, said Iri Bloomfield, a membership committee member.

"We have a fund that is permanently there and we add to it from time to time," she said. "I would assume that the steeple repair would come out of it."

Hobson, who explained that he is "not the clock guy, but the steeple guy," said that work should begin sometime in June or July on the steeple and clock.

The estimated $9,500 in repairs to the steeple would cover restoration of its weathervane, cardinal points and ball, as well as a renailing of all tongue and groove boards on the spire.

First Parish steeple, c. 1860, damaged by lightning; schoolboys on the common look out over the duck pond.

Four louvered vents would be installed at the top of the spire for ventilation and the entire steeple would be sanded, scraped and painted.

Keeper of the town clock Noel Ripley wouldn't mind passing on the clock's gilding needs to The Burgess Company.

When he came on board nearly 30 years ago, Ripley went straight to the height of his profession—atop a fire ladder—so that he could gold leaf the clock's faces.

Ripley thoroughly restored the clock at that time, and sent its 2,000 pulled-apart pounds to the Vocational Technical School (with some help from the highway department).

"The school did a first class job," said Ripley.

The Cohasset clock is a favorite of Ripley, who is a fan of all of Edward Howard's works.

"Howard was an orphan boy from Hingham, who went on to open a clock factory and design many of the mid-19th century South Shore town hall and church tower clocks," said Ripley. "His clocks are fairly simple like a Model A Ford; they're not easy to repair, but they're very straightforward."

Clocks fascinate Ripley, as do people's reactions to them.

"They come to me and say, 'There's nothing wrong with it; it just doesn't work,'" he said. "They don't seem to realize that a clock has about 1,000 gear teeth and all you need is one bent tooth for it not to run."

Church and state

Ironically, the town clock found a home in the First Parish steeple in the 1850s, about 30 years after the great Protestant schism which divided the parish and ended its days as the religious and community center of the town.

"The First Parish Meeting House was a municipal building, as well as the town's church, since 1719," said David Wadsworth, curator for the Cohasset Historical Society. "But there was a great schism all across New England in the old parishes around 1824 between traditionalists, who were in the minority, and what became Unitarians.

"When Congregationalists (dyed in the wool Puritans) split off from the majority Unitarians in Cohasset, they went across the street and built their own church—The Second Congregational Church—and the meeting house ceased to be a town building," he said.

But the restoration of church and state ties in town, so to speak, resumed with the placement of the town clock in the First Parish steeple.

The steeple has recorded time, in a sense, by the ringing of its bell during historic moments in the nation's history.

In 1898, Gilbert Tower inscribed his name and recorded "Dewey's victory at Manilla" [sic] into the steeple's woodwork, referring to Admiral George Dewey's defeat of the Spanish fleet at Manila Bay on May 1, 1898 during the short-lived Spanish-American War.

Wadsworth, who is Tower's cousin, surmised that Tower was probably up in the steeple that day to ring the bells in celebration.

Year later, when the town turned out on the common to rejoice at the announcement of the end of World War II, Gilbert Tower picked a lock in his determination to get up to the steeple to ring the bell.

"The whole town had turned out on the common in the excitement and I don't think anyone criticized him for picking a lock to get to the bell," Wadsworth recalled.

Decades later, Wadsworth continued the family tradition by participating in a noontime ringing of the bell during each day of the Iranian hostage crisis in the 1970s.

While the steeple of First Parish has long recorded momentous moments in time with its bell-ringing, it is no great mystery to Wadsworth as to how the clock came to record secular time from atop the parish.

"It works well there," said Wadsworth. "But I think they chose that building mainly because it had the highest point in Cohasset at the time."

Strangest laws govern liquor sales

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Let's see if I got this straight now: If I owned a packie 10.1 miles from the New Hampshire border, I couldn't sell the stuff on Sunday. But Joe Schmo, who owned one 9.9 miles from the Live Free or Die state, could sell all he wants.

It's what the state of Massachusetts, in its wisdom, has concluded is the way to level the playing field so Joe can compete with New Hampshire stores, all of which seem to be located within walking distance of the Massachusetts border.

The Pilgrims, incidentally, referred to beer as "the good creature of God," and Benjamin Franklin himself is credited with the comment: "Beer is proof that God loves us." Except on Sunday in Massachusetts.

But me, I have to lock up my booze store on Sunday and watch my customers flock to Joe's place, which operates under the same state laws that mine does — except for one.

Now, at long last, there is a move afoot to do away with the Sunday liquor laws so that those benighted folks — which probably includes most of us — can buy a bottle of '89 Cabernet Sauvignon or April '99 Muscatel anytime we want.

Of course, even with Cotton Mather and the Puritans long game, there are those who would take us the other way.

"If you're not smart enough to buy your liquor in six days, you don't deserve to drink it on the seventh," Sen. Mike Morrissey is quoted as saying. Oh, good. Now you have to pass an intellectual test before you can hoist one!

The Pilgrims, incidentally, referred to beer as "the good creature of God," and Benjamin Franklin himself is credited with the comment: "Beer is proof that God loves us." Except on Sunday in Massachusetts.

Beer was so highly regarded in the early days of the church that brewers have, not one, but six patron saints, one of whom (St. Arnulph) is credited with turning water to beer when his funeral cortege ran out of the good creature.

But I digress.

Some of the strangest laws ever devised by man or legislator have been enacted to keep a working man from enjoying his beer and the non-working man from imbibing his cocktail.

One time I checked into an Austin, Texas, hotel when supposedly the Lone Star State was dry. I notice the hotel bar in full orgy. It's for members of the club only, I was told, but as long as I was checked into the hotel, I was officially a club member.

Another time, I flew from Yellowknife in Canada's Northwest Territories to Edmonton only to discover that my flight on to Toronto was not due for another five or six hours. Of course, the way to survive an ordeal like that was in the airport bar.

Unfortunately there was none at the Edmonton airport. But, I was informed, there was one in a hotel a few miles down the road. Naturally, I hustled my thirst off to the hotel only to find the bar door locked.

It's closed, a fellow told me, but it opens up again in an hour. The province of Alberta, he said, follows an old English law that pubs must close between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. so that the working man will have time to reconsider and take his paycheck home.

Not a bad idea.

Voters to get override smorgasbord at special election

Fitzsimmons said.

The school board will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday to discuss specific cuts to its budget.

As it stands now, there will be three questions on the ballot.

If none of the questions wins a simple majority, the taxes on the so-called average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will increase $133 in fiscal year 2000, which begins July 1. By state law, the town can increase its tax levy by 2-1/2 percent a year without an override. The $133 tax increase represents that 2-1/2 percent on the average home.

The proposed overrides are as follows:

- $380,000 — increasing taxes on the average home by an additional $136;
- $509,000 — increasing taxes on the average home by an additional $184;
- $612,000 — increasing taxes on the average home by an additional $222.

The special election will be sandwiched between two special town meetings slated for Monday, May 17 and Monday, May 24.

The first town meeting will present the budget options that will be voted on at the second town meeting after the election results are known.

Voters can vote yes or no on all the questions or any combination thereof. If all three of the overrides pass at the polls by a simple majority, town meeting will have the ability to appropriate money for the budget up to the highest override amount. The same would be true if two of the override questions pass.

In the interim, selectmen and the school committee will prepare essentially four budgets detailing necessary cuts depending on which — if any — override passes muster with the voters. They plan an energetic education campaign in the weeks ahead so that all citizens not only understand the three-question format on the ballot but also have a clear picture of what will be cut under each scenario.

The town is in a time crunch to get the town warrants printed and mailed and to provide proper notice for town meetings and an election so that a balanced budget is passed before the end of the fiscal year.

Selectmen Diane Sullivan and Tom Callahan did not support the menu approach preferring to go with one override figure but said they will back the number voters approve.

Will Smith, 400 Atlantic Ave., urged everyone to get on board with one number and warned the overrides might all go down in defeat.

"If you go with multiple choice, you're taking a risk," he said. "You're taking a risk not having the leadership of the town backing a position and saying 'this is affordable.'"

Dick Avery, chairman of the advisory committee, pointed out the town had a structural problem in its budget making overrides a regular occurrence in the years ahead.

He stressed the town needs to look at the way it conducts its business including negotiating salaries — none of which are on the table of cuts offered by the town or school side.

"The cost of living has not gone up by 6 percent a year, it's gone up 1-1/2 to 2 percent," Avery said, "[illegible] should look at the cost of living increases of 3 percent on top of earned increases.

"I've heard no discussion on how to deal with that."

Avery also said more fees should be looked at in the schools and user fees in other areas should be investigated.

"We need answers," he said. "We can't hold things as sacrosanct because we don't live within 2-1/2. We need to put that type of energy into some structural solutions."

School department to campaign for large override get, lost by a 60 to 40 percent margin. Voter turnout was close to 50 percent, considered good for a town election. An override is needed because the $20 million total operating budget approved at the March 27 town meeting exceeds the 2-1/2 percent tax levy cap by some $766,000.

The school budget — including teachers' health insurance, pension and life insurance funds and debt service on the new school and athletic field — makes up about 58 percent of the total town budget, so the schools' share of the deficit is about $450,000.

Tuesday selectmen decided to go back to voters seeking a smaller override (see related story, page one).

The school committee said input from voters revealed some confusion over whether articles approved at town meeting were included in the override, such as completing the air conditioning project at the new Osgood School. The $190,000 for air conditioning was not included in the override, which was earmarked for operating expenses.

Also, Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey pointed out that often those who are 'for' something stay home but those who vote 'no' make a point of getting out to the polls.

But as the clock ticks toward FY2000, which starts July 1, time is running out and by state law, the town must have a balanced budget.

DeGiacomo said although neither option is attractive because they both involve significant cuts, he prefers giving voters the choice of override questions.

But Jane Pescatore of the Parent School Organization (PSO) said the schools should stick with the original figure in another override try.

"The $766,000 was developed with integrity with the numbers that the schools need," she said. "If you turn away from that, it looks like the original numbers were fat."

The school committee will rely on the PSO to help get the message out to residents about what the cuts would entail.

DeGiacomo said the school board "all feels strongly no cuts should be made. We already cut $75,000 from a budget that was tight.

"There are no good cuts no fair cuts. The prospect of cutting makes you sick," he said.

At the request of Haddad to make cuts, the school committee trimmed $75,000 from its proposed budget before town meeting.

Opening the recently ratified teachers' contract — whose 14th step increase for the most senior of Cohasset's teachers was debated at town meeting — is not a consideration, DeGiacomo said.

"We negotiated the contract in good faith with the teachers and will not go back on our commitment," he said.

What is on the table are supplies, textbooks, transportation, academic programs, athletics and teaching positions.

Malvey detailed possible cuts of $100,000 each from the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools and $245,000 from the middle-high school. These are potential cuts if no override is approved.

Malvey suggested reducing two teaching positions at Deer Hill, one each at the fourth- and sixth-grade levels, saving $75,000. The rest of the cuts at that school would come from supplies, texts, equipment and capital items amounting to about $25,000.

At Osgood, cuts would include supplies, professional development accounts and equipment totaling about $72,000. Eliminating physical education at the kindergarten level, cutting the proposed 1/2 time custodial position, and moneys in the substitute accounts would amount to another $28,000.

At the middle-high school, transportation and custodian cuts total $28,000; academic programs including reducing the proposed addition of 1/2-time physical education and music instructor positions, eliminating the world languages' position and not filling a counselor spot would total about $147,000. Athletic programs would sustain cuts of $28,000 at the middle school and $42,000 at the high school. Cuts would eliminate junior varsity programs and also cut the skiing and sailing programs and freshman boys' basketball at the high school. At the middle school, cuts would spell the end of ice hockey, boys' and girls' basketball and boys' and girls' soccer.

Malvey said the potential cuts were reached in conjunction with administrators.

"I hope this is not the start of decimation of Cohasset Public Schools," he said. "My fear is that once we start making cuts that are not palatable ...once the ball starts rolling it is difficult to stop."

Betsy Connolly, who ran unopposed for the one-year seat on the school board, said the cuts were unacceptable.

"I can't think of anything more depressing," she said. "We were a school system you could be proud of."

She said the schools were just recovering from the impacts of Prop. 2-1/2, which became law nearly 20 years ago. Languages were back in the middle school as well as athletic programs.

"Reducing teachers and increasing class size is just appalling," she said about the reductions planned at Deer Hill.

DeGiacomo said no matter what the override scenario turns out to be — voters will be aware of what the downside is.

"There will be no doubt in anybody's mind what will happen to these schools," he said.

Pescatore, the PSO president, warned the school committee it should stick with a higher override number if the committee wants to motivate parents to work for a tax hike. She said there is a danger that everyone will get caught up in debates rather than going forward with a message about what the schools need to maintain services.

"It will be very hard for parents to push for an override they don't believe in," she said.

Lynn Silva, special services director for Cohasset schools, said the message should be clear. She echoed many in the audience who thought two override questions might confuse voters.

"At the polls, I'd hate to see us lose on form," she said. "Let's keep it simple and press hard for the message to get through."

School committee defends teachers' contract

Selectman Sullivan objects to new top step

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Teachers' Association and the School Committee have ratified a new contract that gives teachers a three percent pay raise per year over the life of the three-year agreement. Few people have complained about the three percent raise. But some people are angry about a contract provision that gives the most experienced teachers an extra step increase.

Some town officials, including selectman Diane Sullivan, are angry that the school committee negotiated an extra step increase for Cohasset's most experienced teachers in a year when the town is facing a severe budget deficit. The step is especially contentious to some officials because of the $766,000 operational override that failed at the polls earlier this month. Another special election is scheduled for May 22, but if voters reject any or all of three options for an override, the School Committee may have to cut as much as $450,000 from its budget.

Step increases are a way of life for schools and municipalities. Steps award good employees with annual pay increases for doing a good job. Usually, steps are awarded independently of cost-of-living pay raises or negotiated salary increases. In Cohasset, teachers receive a six percent pay raise each time they advance through one of the School Department's 13 steps, said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

In defense of the teachers' contract, School Committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the agreement was negotiated beginning last summer and the extra step merely brings the salaries of veteran teachers in line with neighboring communities. The School Committee approved the contract unanimously. Haddad cannot participate in negotiations, but he can vote on the final product. Haddad abstained from voting on the new contract.

At town meeting, Sullivan asked the School Committee to re-open the contract and rescind the new step, which will cost the town $54,000. DeGiacomo said that's not going to happen, although the School Committee is open to identifying $54,000 in cuts elsewhere in its budget.

"We resolved various issues in negotiations and teachers pay was part of that," DeGiacomo said. "In Cohasset, our most experienced teachers were far behind other towns in the area. We addressed that by adding another step. We believe our teachers at all levels deserve at least the average that is paid by other neighboring towns. We negotiated with the teachers' union in good faith and we will not go back on that."

School Committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the extra step merely brings the salaries of veteran teachers in line with neighboring communities.

DeGiacomo said the new step will be most costly in the first year because so many teachers are already at the 13th and final step. He added that far fewer teachers will advance annually to the highest step after the 1999/2000 school year.

Haddad said the new step amounted to what he called a half-step because the pay increase will be only 3.5 percent rather than the usual six percent.

Sullivan remains the most vocal opponent of the new step increase. She admits that the teachers agreed to give up some of their longevity pay. But that still doesn't justify the addition of a new step increase in the midst of a budget crisis, Sullivan said.

"I found the School Committee to be arrogant, and I'm against the 14th step," Sullivan said. "I think this is not the year for such an increase because of our fiscal constraints. If we weren't facing an override, it might be different."

Sullivan said the contract could still be re-opened because it is currently undergoing a legal review before final passage. According to Sullivan, teachers who move up a step and receive three percent cost-of-living increases are actually receiving raises that average between eight and 13 percent per year. Sullivan pointed out that the School Committee said their budget couldn't sustain any more cuts in discussions with town officials prior to town meeting. Now, she added, the School Committee is talking about offsetting the $54,000 for the 14th step with cuts in maintenance and other operational areas.

"They talk of shared texts and we have the maintenance disaster at the schools," Sullivan said. "This just isn't the right time to do this."

DeGiacomo said he knows people are unhappy that the School Committee has chosen not to re-open contract negotiations. He reiterated the position of the School Committee that Cohasset teachers should be paid at least the average salary offered by neighboring towns.

The new step is available only to teachers with Master's Degrees and either 30 or 60 additional college credits.

Shore seeing as they are bringing the children's position in test scores up into the top one percent of the state student body . . . no!

They came to us to ask that we fund the signed contracts, and the mandated (and deserved) special needs budget. We let them, our children, future residents, and ourselves down, and said we wouldn't pay.

Just a suggestion . . . pay those bills, stop the bus service, school lunch programs, and lower the heat in all the buildings till we are at a level of service that we are comfortable paying for . . . and know that level will continue to drop as bills for everything continue to rise.

Do you remember what you loved most about school, or your children's school days . . . don't cut the sports, drama, music, arts . . . that's what we all loved most, and those are the things that give our students their chance to shine, and of which Cohasset can be proud.

Program support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On April 7 more than 150 parents and educators from the South Shore filled Cohasset High School cafeteria to hear renowned psychologist. Dr. David Elkind address the issue of parenting teenagers.

On behalf of the Social Service League of Cohasset, we would like to thank all who helped to make this a free-admission program. In addition to generous co-sponsoring, the Cohasset PSO. We also would like to acknowledge the Vedanta Centre, Cohasset Police, St., Stephen's Church, and the Second Congregtional Church.

Additionally, we appreciate the effort by the school administrators in Cohasset and neighboring towns who notified parents of this event.

Opportunities for like-minded parents to network are valueable. It's gratifying to see the various organizations collaborate to make such programs succeed.

Community Garden Club news

PRESIDENT'S TEA

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its yearly President's tea at the Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Parish Tuesday, April 27. The guests are the Garden Club presidents from the South Shore District. The meeting will begin at noon, followed by a lecture given by the master judge and landscape designer Leslie Frost, who will present "The Classical Garden of China," a slide program providing a unique experience of "The Old China."

HARBOR DAY

For a Harbor Day project, the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will distribute small trees to members of the club and to the third-graders of Osgood School. In addition, 75 more trees will be donated to the high school students who will sell them to raise money for the" Bourke Corcoran Scholarship" fund.

The Tulip trees and Japanese Maples will be two years old and 12 to 18 inches high. The club's aim is to make the neighborhood a healthier and more beautiful place to live in.

Tea party at library

The Friends of Cohasset Library presents an "Anne of Green Gables Tea Party" on Thurs., April 29, from 4-5 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Library. Come meet Anne and other cast members starring in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's upcoming musical production! Children in grades preK through 3 are welcome. Streaky Skippers hoping to find winning ways

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Their machine is sputtering. Their hope is fading. Their backs are against the wall. Whatever cliche you choose to employ, the Cohasset Skippers varsity baseball team is in trouble.

Heading into the season, Cohasset knew they had four tough games at the top of their schedule. Two Hingham games led off, games which would pit the Skippers against stiff competition from a higher division. Following those two, CHS would play Hanover and Norton each once, then, hopefully, move on to an easier schedule.

Not surprisingly, the Skippers fell to 0-4 after those four games, hardly an unexpected record for an unproven team early in the season. However, their next game, against Norwell, was the one that would really hurt.

The Norwell game was one which Cohasset had checked as a "must win," yet they fell to the Clippers in an abysmal game. Now 0-5, Coach Knurek's boys really had their work cut out for them if they wished to earn a berth in the state tournament.

Things got a little better last week when Cohasset whipped Provincetown 17-4. Cohasset's John-Paul Laugelle started the game, then handed the ball to Jim O'Sullivan in the second, who came in and extinguished a PTown rally and held them in check until the fifth. Laugelle then came back in and closed out the last two innings, holding the Fishermen scoreless.

The Skippers also took care of business on offense. Led by senior captain Greg Taylor's five-for-five assault, which included a home run, they launched a sixteen-hit onslaught. Ben Ketchum, Al Schwerin and O'Sullivan also had multi-hit games, as did Greg Parkinson, who bombed a triple to the left-center gap in the third inning.

Junior Joe Pergola drove in three runs and senior Ryan Story picked up a base hit. Freshman Tim Straughn reached a milestone as well, lining a single for his first varsity base hit. Straughn's classmates, Nick Bolster and Robin Murphy, both played well in the field for the home team.

In their fourth straight home game, Cohasset teed off again, this time on South Shore Vo-Tech. Pergola threw a four-hit shutout over the seven innings and chalked up his first win in two years, since coming back from shoulder problems. Pergola had complete control of the opposing hitters, fanning nine, including one to end the game.

Pergola's teammates offered more than enough support, posting fifteen runs. Vo-Tech's pitchers had trouble finding the plate and, when they could find it, the Skipper hitters were more than happy to swing away. Laugelle and O'Sullivan each had two RBIs and Murphy picked up three. But the game's of-

Race was a singular sensation

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

For most, running a marathon involves training with a group of people and the chance to socialize with friends. But Mary Ernst had a completely different motive.

"It actually started because at the end of the day, I used to go for long walks by myself," said Ernst, a Cohasset resident. "I have a big family, so the longer the walks the better," she joked. "Finally, someone said to me 'You walk so fast, you might as well be running.'"

The idea of running, in particular a marathon, was not always pleasing to Ernst.

"I ran track in high school, and I didn't like it," said Ernst. "It hurt. I had been to the marathon before, and I always thought they were crazy for running it. Then I started running at night about two years ago, and there was no pain."

The idea of running the marathon began to creep into her head.

"I was a lone runner," said Ernst. "I did it on my own. I pulled a training program off of the Internet that really seemed to fit into my lifestyle. I did some short runs on the week, and then I did one long run on the weekend. That worked out perfect for me because I would do my short runs at night during the week, and then when my husband came home on Sunday I was like 'I'm outta here'. I didn't want to join a running club. I was fairly on my own."

Next for Ernst was qualification.

"I ran the marathon in Burlington, Vt.," said Ernst. "I'd set a goal and I was focused on meeting a time so I could qualify for Boston. I really didn't enjoy it because I was so worried about qualifying."

Boston would be a different experience for Ernst.

"It was an amazing experience," said Ernst. "I just wanted to enjoy it.

Boys track rolls on

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys track team continued its impressive run this season with a pair of victories, including a 71.5-64.5 upset of Norton.

Quadruple winner Brian Krupczek led the way, placing first in the triple jump, the long jump, the 200 and the 4x100. Captain Stefan Vanderweil was a double winner in the high hurdles and the low hurdles, while grabbing third in the high jump. Dan Trowers was also a double winner in the high jump and the relay.

In the other meet the Skippers took on an undermanned Norwell squad and won convincingly 105-30. Trowers was the quadruple winner this time, finishing first in the 100, 4x100, the high jump and the long jump. Krupczek was a triple winner in the 200, 4x100 and the triple jump.

Freshman Peter Maitlin threw the javelin 134'10 for a personal best, while classmate Steve Laney also had a personal best in the discus with a toss of 101'5. Freshman Dan Kinchla took first in the two mile to edge out sophomore Dan Duffy. Captain Craig Parker won the shot

I stopped a couple of times and hugged friends I saw along the way. The people are incredible. The crowds are amazing. I just wanted to look around and take in all the sites and sounds. It was really fun running on these roads that I've always driven on."

When it was over, Ernst was ready to move on.

"I was just trying to track down my husband, who was there with four of our children," said Ernst. "On the way home we dropped of the older kids with some of their friends. When I got home, I was greeted by a friend who presented me with wreath made of ivy and habiscus."

On the day after, Ernst was not faced with many effects from the race.

"I don't have any blisters or anything, but sometimes it hits you two or three days after the race, so I wouldn't be surprised if I walked with a funny gait."

As for next year, Ernst thinks she'll return to the sidelines.

"I don't think I'll do it again next year," said Ernst, who finished in 4:05.49. "I didn't realize the impact it had on my family. The amount of time I spent on it is huge. I didn't qualify for next year. I would have had to finish in 3:50. That would have been hard because you're just shuffling along with everybody else for the first two miles. I'm happy to have been able to finish Boston at least once."

What did Ernst learn from this experience?

"If you want something bad enough, you find a way to do it."

Time to shovel the dirt tracks

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The millennium is on the way, and, barring Armageddon, Abington, and Hull will head into the 21st century with their high school track teams still competing in the Dark Ages of track and field; on dirt surfaces.

It begs the question, when are these towns going to follow the lead of the Hanovers and Cohassets in building suitable tack facilities for its young athletes?

An all-weather track is not only attractive in drawing more students to the sport, but can be utilized by recreational and competitive runners, alike, in town.

Cohasset High's track, which circles Alumni Field, was part of a complete reconstruction and relocation of the various fields on the high school grounds. The all-weather track is sleek and fast, much like Hingham High's outdoor oval.

Abington has a dirt track, reminiscent of those in the 1960s. Abington's circles the football field and also cuts right through the outfield of the Green Wave's varsity baseball field.

The track surface is loose and hardly conducive to fast times. And though it affects the times of athletes in all the events, it is the sprinters whose performances are slowed drastically because of the tough footing.

The ND tracksters will be remembering three of their own in a unique way during the Fifth Annual Notre Dame Freshman/Sophomore Invitational Meet on April 24.

Colleen Clancy, Erin and Allison Darlin were killed in a car accident earlier in the school year. Clancy, whose best event was the mile, will have a special award in her memory presented to the winner of the four-lap race. Likewise, the shot put winner will receive a plaque in memory of Erin, a shot putter when she was on the squad.

The meet should have a bigger-than-usual turnout because of the memorial awards in honor of the popular girls. As for the meet itself, Kates is expecting a good-sized number of competitors. If last year is any indication, it could be a huge meet. In 1998, 625 girls competed. Kates said 10-15 schools will be competing this year.

Don't be surprised if the overall field in the June 20 Clancy-Darlin Memorial Road Race rivals the hugely-popular Fourth of July race. Proceeds from the 5-mile run will go towards memorial scholarships in the girls' names.

The race has something for everyone and should attract participants of all ages. Those not wishing to run five miles can opt for either the 2-mile fun run or 1-mile walk. The Fourth of July event has topped 1,000 runners the past two years, a number the June 20 race should rival.

The Sixth Annual Scituate Fire Local 1464 Benefit Road Race will be held on May 8. Beginning in North Scituate, the 5K race runs alongside the beach and offers some beautiful seaside scenery. A 1-mile run and 5K walk will be held in conjunction with the race. For more information, call (781) 545-4340.

put and was on the first place 4x100 relay team which qualified for states and remained undefeated. Parker also took second in the discus and the 200.

Senior Ben Rocne has bounced back from an illness to finish second in the long jump and the 100, and also ran in the 4x100 Freshman Liam Martin placed in the high hurdles, the low hurdles and the high jump. For the third meet in a row, Craig Davis placed in the shot put.

"Ben was sick earlier in the season, but he has really bounced back," said coach Tom Hughes. "Craig has been consistent all year long."

Hughes has been impressed with his squad's rate of improvement.

"We had 12 more personal bests," said Hughes. "Normally we might get three or four. It's very inspirational as a coach. The points are fine, but it is the battles against yourself. We continue to get personal bests each week. Our strengths are speed and jumping, and it's well-recognized throughout the league."

The Skippers are now 3-0 in the league, and 3-1 overall. They will host unbeaten Carver on April 27.

fensive highlight came when Straughn, in only his fifth varsity at-bat, came up with the bases loaded in the sixth. The freshman outfielder croaked a towering drive to right-field, clearing the bases with a grand slam.

But Cohasset has little time to rest on their laurels. With a discouraging 2-5 record, they have a lot of ground to make up in order to get a shot at the tourney. On Wednesday, they played South Shore Vo-Tech again , hoping to pick up another much needed win that would help put them back on track.

Cohasset MS walk a success

More than 250 people raised over $40,000 for the Multiple Sclerosis walk in Cohasset on Saturday.

"It was an excellent turnout," said Communications Director Dick Fahlander. "We are very pleased. We've scheduled about 25 walks in New Hampshire and Massachusetts, and our overall goal is to raise $800,000. It appears that we are going to achieve that."

Exact numbers won't be known immediately.

"This is always a big project," said Fahlander. "It looks like somebody dropped a bomb in our office. It takes a while to add everything up because the money comes in small bills or checks. We have people who pledge, and then we send out invoices to them, and then we should have an idea."

RECREATION NEWS

Applications for positions available

The recreation department is accepting applications for Playground Program Counselor positions for their seven week summer program for children ages 3 1/2 to 12. Applicants must be at least 18 years of age with demonstrated experience working with children in camp, sports or organizational environments.

Should you be interested in working with children in day camp structured program, call the Cohasset Recreation Department at (781) 383-4109 for details and application form.

The recreation department is also accepting applications for sports/games program coordinators by calling the office.

Fitness Center hours

The Fitness Center at Cohasset High School will be open to the public for use or registration during the following hours, until 125 members are attained: Mondays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., Wednesdays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., Thursdays 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturdays 8 a.m. to noon.

These hours/days will remain in effect until 125 individuals are registered, at which time the center will be open expanded hours Mondays through Saturdays.

The fee is $15 per month, per person and registration is at the Fitness Center, Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St. Enter the school via the front door located to the right side of the main entrance to CHS.

Equi named Director

The Recreation Commission announces that Martha Equi will again be the director of the Summer Playground Program for children 3 1/2 to 12 years. Registration will be held the week of June 14. Details coming soon.

The Recreation Commission has also established fee charges for the 1999 Playground Program which will remain the same as the 1998 program as follows: 5-12 year olds: $150 for first child ($275 non-residents), 3-5 year olds: $125 for first child. Discounts for second and subsequent children are $25. Activity fees — $45 for first child, second child, and $35 for third and subsequent children. Mandatory, non-refundable activity fee is separate from program fee to be paid at registration, which will cover most special events and a T-shirt. A separate check will be necessary.

Limited enrollment has been set for each program.

Non-residents are taken on a space available basis and there are no discounts available for multiple children.

All children must be toilet trained.

Programs

5-12 year olds, full day programs, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

5-7 year old program — Deer Hill School

8-12 year old program — Deer Hill School

Pre-school 3-5 year old half day program - Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Must be born January 1, 1994 through March 1, 1996 to qualify. Held at New Osgood School.

Open gym boys and girls

The recreation department also announces that the Osgood School gym will be supervised on Wednesday evenings, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. for grades 7-12 boys and girls who wish to play basketball on a pick-up basis or work on skills.

Andy Fitzsimmons and J. L. Williams are volunteering their time, under the direction of Ron Ford, keeping the gym open and available to grades 7-12 students.

The first sessions are each Wednesday evening through June 16.

There is no charge for this opportunity due to the volunteer efforts of everyone involved. All players must be picked up by 9 p.m. sharp at the Osgood School.

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary, Flotilla 1208, and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a spring, six session, Safe Boating Course offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults, however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16 year olds and under, who wish to operate a craft powered by 25 horsepower or more. U.S.C.G.A., Flotilla 1208 instructors will teach the six session course, scheduled to begin on Tuesday May 11, at the Cohasset High School. Classes will meet each Tues. and Thurs. Evening from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., May 11, through May 27.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department Office at 383-4109, as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on a first call basis. There will be a $25 per person fee for this program that covers the cost of the textbook and class materials.

Checks for payment must be made out to: U.S.C.G.A. Flotilla 1208. While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children aged 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

Certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Collecting 'Box Tops for Education'

By Sharyn Studley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

General Mills is supporting Cohasset children's education for the future with its annual "Box Tops for Education" campaign. This program helps accredited K-8 public, private, parochial and military schools raise money to purchase items that are not covered by shrinking school budgets.

Through this program, the Joseph Osgood Elementary School was able to raise $967.50 to be put directly towards the purchase of playground equipment. We would like to thank all the students, parents, family and friends who helped make this year a great success! Our goal for the 1999/2000 school year is $2,000. All money raised will be used to purchase much needed computers and software.

We are urging parents, relatives, friends and neighbors to take advantage of a great way to raise money for our children's education. Our school will receive 15 cents for every qualifying General Mills cereal box top collected and 10 cents for every qualifying General Mills snack and Yoplait Yogurt multipack box top collected. A qualifying box top is labeled with the "General Mills Box Tops for Education" symbol and is located on the side panel or the top flap of General Mills products.

Box tops can be dropped off at the Osgood School Library, South Shore Community Center Nursery School in the box provided. The Cohasset Recycling Center has a sign posted and an envelope for your convenience.

Let's not throw our money away! Encourage others in the community to do the same. If you have any questions or comments, call the program coordinator at 383-6214.

OBITUARIES

John Howland Studley

John Howland Studley, 83, a lifelong resident of Hingham, died on Friday, April 16th at his home after a long illness.

Born in Hingham and an alumnus of Derby Academy of Hingham, Burdett College and Boston University School of Law, he was a direct descendent of original Hingham settlers and the first religious leaders of both the Pilgrims and the Puritans.

During WWII he served in the legal office of General Douglas MacArthur in the Southwest Pacific Theatre and subsequently entered the private practice of law in Rockland, Hanover and Hingham. For many years he practiced from a small building under the 'Buttonwood Tree' in Hingham Center on original family land that was long ago known as Studley Square. In his law practice, he was particularly well known for his ready wit, knowledge of administrative procedure, historical folklore, and accessibility at all hours.

For many years he served as a Town Historian and was a former President of the National Association of Leavitt Families as well as a member of numerous legal and veteran organizations.

He leaves his wife, Joyce D. (Parker) Studley of Hingham; his brother Thomas B. Studley of Hingham and the late Liba L. Studley. He also leaves several nephews and nieces.

Funeral services were held Tuesday at the Church of St. John the Evangelist in Hingham. Burial was in the Hingham Center Cemetery. Rather than flowers, donations would be preferred in his memory to the Hingham Scholarship Fund, c/o the Town Treasurer, 210 Central St., Hingham, Ma 02043.

Agatha E. Robicheau

Agatha E. Robicheau of Cohasset died April 11.

Mrs. Robicheau was formerly of Nova Scotia.

Wife of the late Antoine J. Robicheau, she leaves two sons, Arthur J. Robicheau of West Roxbury and Joseph A. Robicheau of Norwood; three daughters, Jeanne Murray of Weymouth and Nova Scotia, Noreen Campedelli of Cohasset and Kathleen Marsh of Milford, Conn.; a sister, Veronica Peakes of Canada; 16 grandchildren; and 17 great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Thursday at Holy Name Church. Interment will be in Blue Hill Cemetery.

Arrangements were by the William J. Gormley Funeral Home, West Roxbury.

Contributions in Mrs. Robicheau's memory may be made to the Diabetes Society of Greater Boston, 1330 Beacon St., Brookline 02446.

Robert F. Redgate

Robert F. Redgate, 69, of Cohasset, a salesman for local liquor distributors and security guard for the Veteran's Administration, died Sunday at the South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Mr. Redgate was active in youth baseball as a younger man and was an umpire for youth softball in Brockton.

He was born, raised and educated in Brockton. He lived in Norwell for many years before moving to Cohasset eight years ago.

Longstanding illness forced Mr. Redgate to a wheelchair, but he enjoyed weekly communion calls from the pastor and regular communicants of St. Anthony's Church.

He leaves a son, Robert Redgate Jr., of Hull; two brothers, George Redgate of Brockton and Richard Redgate of Attleboro, and two grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church. Cremation followed.

Third annual Mitzvah Day

If you've ever wanted the opportunity to get out and do something nice for someone else, have we got a day for you! Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main in Hingham, invites residents from the entire South Shore and beyond, to participate in the third annual Mitzvah Day, Sunday, May 2. Mitzvah is a Hebrew word meaning commandment and has come to be understood as a good deed. On this day, beginning at 9 a.m., members of our religious community will have an opportunity to work together in mitzvah projects coordinated by the temple's Social Action Committee.

These projects include the Walk for Hunger, a blood drive, Temple landscaping and cleanup, infant care education, home repair for elderly neighbors in need, sprucing up the Mary Martha Center, beach cleanup, meal preparation for the less fortunate, collecting dog and cat food for local shelters and more.

The day will conclude with a celebrity barbecue at the synagogue, beginning at 12:30 p.m. To register for any of the above activities or for more information, please call the Temple office at 781-749-8103. By joining forces, you can help make a difference to repair the world.

2nd Congregational will be part of Great Choir

Hundreds of United Church of Christ choirs members, including the choirs at the second Congregational Church in Cohasset and the Hingham Congregational Church, are to rehearse for the "Great Choir" that will appear on April 25 at the Worcester Centrum as part of the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the Massachusetts Conference, United Church of Christ. The United Church of Christ is the oldest and largest Protestant denomination in Massachusetts.

Over 1,200 singers are expected to join the Great Choir, representing over 170 churches from the denomination's 430 congregations. They will sing six anthems during the event, which begins at 2 p.m. One anthem was commissioned from composer Allen Pote especially for the 200th anniversary.

Support for local police

Starting this week, prosecutors from Norfolk District Attorney William Keating's Office are just a phone call away, 24 hours a day, for local police officers.

District Attorney Keating said his move is meant "to further support local police departments by making prosecutors available around the clock" to assist officers or answer questions.

"This is something we talked about doing during the campaign, and it is a promise I wanted to keep quickly" said District Attorney Keating, who took office in January.

"Homicide, sexual assault and motor vehicle homicide cases already trigger the instant notification of the District Attorney," Keating said,. "This adds another layer of accessibility, so that police who come across something unusual or need assistance preparing a search warrant can have an assistant district attorney on the other end of the phone instantly."

In the past, police departments have sometimes been relegated to calling around trying to find an assistant district attorney who happened to be home and answering the phone when officers need guidance through a legal question. Now all of the departments in Norfolk County have the number of the single cellular phone that an "on-duty" prosecutor will carry at all times.

"This is a simple step, but it fills an important gap in the integration of police and prosecution efforts," Keating said.

Child safety month

April is National Child Safety Prevention month. In an effort to support the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is providing extensive information about keeping all children safe from abuse and neglect.

A variety of pamphlets are available ranging from the development of infants to tips for choosing a babysitter and ways for grandparents to nurture and support their grandchildren.

The Dianne DeVanna Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect, a group located in Braintree, has provided this information free to the public. The DeVanna Center is a non-profit organization whose mission is both to support and strengthen the individual family members and the family. The center was fou by the citizens of Braintre memorial to Dianne DeVanna, died at age 11 in 1978 of child abus.

All pamphlets are located in the children's room and will be available through the end of April.

Columbine tragedy raises questions

Could it happen here?

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset Middle-High School students began their first day back from school vacation with a moment of silence for the victims of April 20th's tragedy at Columbine High School outside Denver.

Middle-High School principal Curtis Collins addressed students and faculty about Dylan Klebold's and Eric Harris' gun and pipe bomb rampage that cost 14 people their lives before the two turned their guns on themselves when a SWAT team entered the building.

"I simply spoke with them about the event and said that for those who attended Cohasset Middle-High School on a daily basis, there is not one of us—principals, teachers, cafeteria workers or students—who could not relate to how horrible that situation must have been."

After the moment of silence and brief talk, the day went on as usual, Collins said.

Still, as more evidence unfolds about the drama that played out in a similarly affluent high school two thirds of the way across the United States — students, parents and faculty continued to try to make some kind of sense out of the event.

A spontaneous discussion among students in the library on the issue drew Collins in. One student told him that she "could hardly wait" for her Current Domestic Issues class, where the subject was sure to be discussed.

"This incident has become a sort of instant curriculum for them," Collins

Override full of uncertainty

Town meeting could complicate things

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There's one thing for sure — the town is heading into uncharted territory.

That was the message from the advisory committee Monday which tried to come to grips with the failed $766,000 override and what that means to Cohasset.

With just two months remaining in the fiscal year, the town is running out of time to make up the more than $3/4 million deficit through a combination of budget cuts and an attempt at a lesser override figure at the polls May 22.

Although the advisory committee, which is an appointed board, makes recommendations at town meeting on most matters — its primarily roll is a financial one.

What is clear is that a menu of override options will be on the special election ballot. But what is not clear is how town meeting will divvy up the increased levy capacity if one, two, three or none of the overrides pass and how advisors will come down on the entire issue.

Town Manager Mark Haddad tried at the selectmen's meeting last week to get a guarantee from the school committee and selectmen to agree to certain budget percentages for the town and school side.

"Mark made a valiant effort, but I'm not sure that it is written in stone," advisor Galt Grant pointed out.

The advisory committee conceded that in reality, town meeting has the power to appropriate the budget and that forum is not necessarily a microcosm of the electorate. For example, at the March 27 annual town — meeting attended by some 200 registered voters — the budget with its sizable deficit passed easily. But at the polls — where 2,300 people voted — the override to raise taxes to make up the 'Buck-a-bag' is back on the table

Scituate is doing it, and so might Cohasset. That's what selectmen concluded at Tuesday night's meeting, when they voted to approve a $15 increase in the price of dump stickers, as well as to bring the buck-a-bag system for trash before town meeting in the fall.

Last year, families paid $65 and a single person paid $33. Now the stickers will cost $80 per family and there will be a new price for seniors: if they're over 65, it's $65. Single residents will pay $40.

The increase should add about $20,000 more per year to town coffers, though that amount is not expected to cover the $26,000 increase SEMASS in Rochester will charge next year.

Last year, sticker revenue covered $90,000 of the $214,000 budget. Town Manager Mark

Health board reorganizes

The Board of Health elected Alix P. White as chairman and Stephen Bobo as clerk. White takes over the reins from former chairman Kevin Ulmer, who did not run for reelection. Robin M. Lawrence is the newest member of the health board.

Assessors elect chairman

Elsa Miller is the new chairman of the board of assessors and Michael Patrolia is the vice-chairman. The board's newest member is William Smith who ran for the seat vacated by long-time assessor James Lagrotteria in the April 10 town election.

Register to vote

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting Monday, May 17, is Friday, May 7, and the last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election Saturday, May 22, is Saturday, May 1.

On both dates the clerk's office will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before the respective cut-off dates.

Charter school put to the test

Parents give South Shore Charter School high marks

By Josh Myerov
CORRESPONDENT

Tim Anderson is tired of seeing his South Shore Charter School mentioned in the newspaper only when some type of conflict arises. If you really want to know what's going on at the Hull-based school, the CEO and founder suggests you "go to a governance meeting and see 40 or 50 parents making sausage on a Saturday morning, trying to figure out what to do about this policy, or that calendar — things of that nature."

The South Shore Charter School is one of 35 state funded charter schools to open its doors since passage of the Education Reform Act of 1993, making them possible. While in name, the K-12 school serves the South Shore, the reality is that getting students there from outside Hull can prove a difficult task. While the

ED REFORM:
6 Years Later
— CHAPTER 5 —

The Education Reform Act of 1993 made it possible to create a new kind of public school — one that draws taxpayer support but sidesteps bureaucratic rules.

But critics say charter schools drain resources from established public schools and also divert attention from the essential task of improving the performance of schools that still serve the vast majority of the commonwealth's 900,000 public school students. Less than 1 percent of that total currently attend the 35 charter schools currently operating in Massachusetts.

Charter schools have not only sparked much enthusiasm, but opponents question the pace and the accomplishments of the movement.

"The goal is to benefit the public education system," said state Sen. Marc Pacheco, a Democrat from Taunton who would like to boost funding of traditional schools.

"Instead of building a second system of public schools why not make the ones we have work?" asked Pacheco. "There are all sorts of ways we could improve our schools instead of investing in what could turn out to be a gimmick."

Whether charter schools represent a gimmick or a solution for the public school system remains a divisive issue. And the debate is certain to grow more intense with the recent selection of James Peyser to head the state Board of Education.

"The structure of public education itself is in need of reform," Peyser said, outlining his stand on the issue in a 1996 speech in Boston. "We must dismantle the monopoly structure of public education through deregulation, independently managed schools and choice."

In particular, critics claim that charter schools have failed to make regular schools more innovative. Although the legislature designed charter schools in part as breeding grounds for new ideas that would enrich all of the commonwealth's schools, some claim no benefits are evident yet.

"Charter schools have never fulfilled their initial goal to serve as laboratories of best practices and to disseminate them to other schools," said Kathy Kelley, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers, which represents 20,000 teachers.

Today nearly 10,000 students are enrolled in the 35 charter schools in Massachusetts. Nine of those schools are run by for-profit companies. Community activists, educators, parents and students run most of the commonwealth charter schools. Local school committees or teachers' unions run four so-called Horace Mann Charter Schools in Boston, Brockton and Springfield.

Charter schools draw many students from urban areas. In fact, a relatively high percentage of black, Hispanic and students from low-income households attend charter schools. And their popularity is growing — more than 5,000 children remain on waiting lists.

The commonwealth is one of 34 states, including Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and New York, spearheading a national movement to offer public school students a choice.

"It's off to an amazing start," said Scott Hamilton, the former associate commissioner for charter schools in Massachusetts who is now managing director of an education foundation in San Francisco.

"Charter schools prove what public education can be when it's organized a little differently, when the government oversees but does not operate a school, and what happens when school leaders control their budget, and can hire and fire their staff," he said.

The charter school idea

The idea behind charter schools is simple: create innovative schools free from organizational red tape and union rules. The result is that each school has a different orientation. Some focus on working with children who have gotten in trouble with the law. Others get back to basics, while many specialize in preparing students for careers in fields such as health care, arts and technology.

The movement is still young. The first charter school opened nearly seven years ago in Minnesota. Two years ago, that state lifted the cap on the number of charter schools that could be created and 38 are in operation today, with 20 more planned, according to Jon Schroeder, director of the St. Paul-based Charter Friends National Network, a non-profit group.

Nationwide, more than 300,000 students attend about 1,207 charter schools, according to the Center for Education Reform, a Washington, D.C.-based organization.

Arizona has the most charter schools in the nation - 311 serve about 30,000 of the state's 790,000 public school students.

The US Department of Education is promoting charter schools by distributing $100 million in grants to the states to develop them. Last summer, Massachusetts got a three-year grant of about $10 million that can be tapped by charter schools, said Alex Medler, a consultant with the department's charter school program.

Despite the rush to develop charter schools, little evidence exists to prove whether charter schools boost student test scores or achievement, partly because the movement is so new. On the statewide MCAS tests administered in Massachusetts last spring, for example, most charter schools performed no better than traditional schools.

But there were some exceptions in which charter students beat the average, including the Parker School, the Cape Cod Lighthouse Charter School in Orleans, the Benjamin Franklin Classical Charter School in Franklin and the Neighborhood House Charter School in Dorchester.

No evidence exists, however, that charter schools systematically achieve success, but it may be too early to measure that.

"A lot of these schools are only a year or two old," said Dave Deschryver, senior policy analyst at the Center for Education Reform.

Parents give South Shore Charter School high marks

state mandates that bus service be provided for students within Hull, out of towners are left to fend for themselves.

Nonetheless, for parents as close as Scituate and as far away as Plymouth, having to carpool every day is a price they're willing to pay for a rather untraditional education.

Sue and Kevin Bachelder of Scituate are typical in that they simply were not happy with the education their daughter Jessica was receiving in the traditional public school system. "Jess was getting lost. There was about 25 kids in the class," explained Sue Bachelder. "She was getting behind so we tried to find an alternative that would be more hands on."

Since transferring two years ago, Bachelder says her daughter has excelled, not only bringing her grades up but actually enjoying going to school. As a parent, Bachelder likes the same thing about the school as her daughter does - the project-based curriculum.

"I like the projects they have," she said, "everything from computer projects to landscaping to dance theatre." As part of the international perspectives program, Jessica has been going into Boston every Wednesday with classmates to teach English as a second language at a Japanese school. Next year, she hopes to finish the project with a 3 week trip to Japan, again to teach English.

Stephen Schiller of Weymouth said his 1st grade daughter has one of the best teachers he's ever encountered. Schiller also likes that kindergartners, 1st graders, and 2nd graders are taught together in one classroom as are 3rd, 4th, and 5th graders. "The older kids help the younger ones along," said Schiller, "I think it helps the younger kids strive because they want to do what the older ones are doing."

Ed Shea of Marshfield concurred that multi-grade classes allows his 3rd grade daughter to learn at her own pace. "She is very advanced in some areas and not so advanced in others," Shea said. He added that "she had subjects in kindergarten that she would never get in the public schools, like Russian and sign language."

Nearing the close of its fourth year, the 345-student South Shore Charter School seems to have been tested and quizzed over the years more often than its students.

Ironically, said Anderson, people complain that charter schools are not regulated enough, but "in a given year, somebody is reviewing some part of us six or seven times. For other [public] schools, it's one or two."

Anderson's next test will be the first week in May when the Department of Education has scheduled its comprehensive Program Review, conducted once every five years. A Department of Education team will visit the school for an entire week. Parent and teacher interviews, classroom observations, and a study of individual student records are all to be included. A report will be prepared to address everything from Special Education to Title 1 to 504 Access programs.

Anderson however is not complaining. He hopes the report will be instructive as a preparation for the charter school's greatest test of all — the renewal application — also every five years. While Anderson said he doesn't foresee any major obstacles in the application process this summer, he and his colleagues will be answering some rather important questions:

Does the school live up to its mission and its original charter? Is the school financially viable? Is the school providing good educational services? Anderson gives a big yes to all three. "The school lives up to everything we were expecting, hoping, pushing for, and promising," he said.

Independence Building gets new owner

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Former Cohasset residents Thomas and Lauren Koncius, owners of the real estate appraisal and consulting firm Atlantic Valuations Group, will be the new owners of the historic Independence Building on South Main Street.

The Koncius' bid of $100,100 came in $2,100 higher than that of Kelly Kalus of Clay Strokes, who bid $98,000. Last week, Kalus asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to consider her bid which prompted selectmen to call for a meeting to discuss proposed uses of the building by the two competing parties.

The Koncius' plan to restore the 149-year-old building, which has over the years housed the town's first police station, as well as the Cohasset Historical Society's gown collection and local youths who used the building as a Teen Center. Thomas Koncius told selectmen that he is a licensed contractor and would do the restoration work himself with an aim to use the building for business purposes.

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown asked the Koncius' if they would keep the stairs that lead up to Highland Avenue open.

"I want to make sure that the stairs don't get shut off," he said. "Many people use the stairs as a shortcut."

Selectmen approved the Koncius' bid after Haddad told them he had received an e-mail from the second highest bidder, Kalus.

Kelly and Steven Kalus addressed selectmen later that evening, explaining that they withdrew their bid so as not to deprive the town of the highest bid or lead the town into potential litigation.

"We felt it was in the best interest of the town to not force your hand on this," said Kelly Kalus. "We didn't want to risk a potential costly lawsuit for the town."

The Kaluses are currently renting leasing space for their Clay Strokes business in the village, but said that they've talked with their landlord and feel more comfortable about remaining there.

Brown thanked the couple.

The Koncius' win means the end of Dean Rizzo's dreams for a public restroom with rented office space to encourage more visitors to the village area.

Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, argued that the village would benefit from such a facility, which would encourage visitors to stay in the area longer. The chamber bid $50,000 for the building. Other bidders included John E. Conway, 137 Washington St., Norwell, $77,200; Mark G. Patrolia, 12 Jarvis Ave., Hingham, $67,000; and David Bergers, 14 Bayberry Lane, Cohasset, $15,550.

The request for proposal (RFP) calls for a closure on the property within 45 days of acceptance of the bid, Haddad said..

AROUND TOWN

GET WELL SOON!

We hear Polly Logan is on the mend after recent surgery. A kind, gentle, generous lady — Polly is one of our very favorite people and represents the heart of Cohasset.

We know she'd appreciate your good wishes. So don't hesitate to send a card to her home at 121 Nichols Road.

XAVERIAN HONORS

Hats off to Kyle R. Bunstein, Brian F. Lewis and Eric F. Libby, all of Cohasset, for achieving honors for the third marking period at Xaverian Brothers High School.

Keep up the good work, guys!

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE NEWS

The mailbox was full of news from Middlebury College this week. Three young men from Cohasset are doing the town and their families proud by attaining Dean's List status during the fall term. The Dean's List is the second highest recognition for academic achievement at the liberal arts college in Vermont.

Our congratulations go to John J. Flanagan III, Theodore W. Noon and Aaron D. Sawchuk.

NDA SCHOLARS

This is the week for academic achievement!

Cohasset girls are doing well at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham where Allison Berg, Kristen Devine, and Elizabeth Smoot, who had a grade point average of 3.9 or better, all made the Principal's List for the third quarter. Emily Coyne and Anna Roche achieved second honors with a grade point average of 3.4 or better.

Well done!

THAYER STANDOUTS NAMED

At the Thayer Middle School, seventh-graders Michael Ernst and Lindsay Feig were recognized for their outstanding effort for the second trimester and Gregory Smith made the achievement and effort honor roll.

Eighth-grader Carly Kalus was named to the achievement and effort honor roll and her classmate, Dylan Lanzillotti was recognized for effort.

Also putting Cohasset on the map is Lauren Smith, class of 2001 at Thayer upper school. Lauren, who is the daughter of William and Maureen Smith, was named to the second term honor roll.

HONOR ROLL AT HOLDERNESS

Alexander Gaston and Neely Wakeman, both seniors from Cohasset, have been named to the third term honor roll at the Holderness School in Plymouth, New Hampshire.

Alexander also served as the house leader of his dormitory and played the lead role in a production of "How to Succeed in Business," and raced on a boys' varsity alpine ski racing team that took second place at the New England prep school skiing championships.

This winter, Neely also served as the house leader of her dormitory and was captain of a girls' varsity hockey team that reached the semi-finals of the New England prep school championship tournament.

Neely is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Wakeman of Atlantic Avenue and Alexander is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Gaston, III, of Jerusalem Road.

OPINION

Lessons in the aftermath

The images of the horrific tragedy are burned in our memories: teenagers running for their life across the school grounds; bloodied victims lying on the grass as trauma workers assess their conditions; SWAT team members carefully, painfully making their way into the school facility; reports and cameras in a whir attempting to cover every devastated child falling apart in the comforting embrace of a parent.

The scenes unfolding April 20 in Colorado could have happened anywhere. The students interviewed looked like All-American kids. The sprawling school campus with its rolling green lawns, tennis courts and mountains looming in the distance gave you the impression of a secure and safe environment.

But that safety was forever changed with each gun shot and grenade exploding. Most of us watched in horror as one gruesome detail after detail was uncovered. Most of us were transfixed to our TV sets at work or at home as we learned of the devastating tragedy and heard first-hand accounts as overcome teenagers recounted seeing their friends get shot in the head or of how they sought cover in a small closet harboring as many of 20 people looking for safety.

We watched in amazement. We cried. We expressed our shock and disbelief. And we prayed. We prayed for the teenagers, parents and all those caught up in this senseless tragedy. And we wondered....

The reality is this could happen in Any Town U.S.A. Cohasset, nor any other community on the South Shore for that matter, is immune to what took place. We have to face up to that reality. We need to take precautions. And we need to hear the cries of those in pain.

Even experts say it's hard to believe there were no warning signs from the two young men who went on the rampage and then ended their own lives. Something of this magnitude doesn't just happen. We owe it to our children to start taking these issues more seriously. We need our counselors and school leaders to listen more intently and act on warning signs. We aren't suggesting a police state or making more out of something than is merely a school prank or typical teen angst. Trained professionals know the difference and we need more of them in our schools to work with students, faculty and families.

We also need to start taking more serious consideration of security issues. We urge Superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey and school leaders to review security measures in all of our schools. Just last week we visited a South Shore school and every door was unlocked and allowed easy access for any visitor.

We need to get more strict and perhaps consider locking doors so visitors are required to ring a bell to gain entry to the school. It would clearly give school officials a better handle on who is entering and leaving the schools. It may sound drastic, but we'll guarantee folks at Columbine High School will be taking those measures. It would not have stopped the Columbine tragedy which occurred at the hands of students, but it is one more measure to guarantee a safer school.

There are countless lessons we can all learn from this tragedy – the most important being we can't let ourselves be lulled into a false sense of safety and security. It's up to all of us to make our schools safer so it can be the happy and encouraging learning environments we all cherish.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Living with Prop. 2-1/2

TO THE EDITOR:

I was struck by your article in the April 22 Mariner, in which the School Committee indicated that the recent operating budget override defeat was due to voter confusion and apathy, and that "There are no good cuts, no fair cuts. The prospect of cutting makes you sick." Actually, school expenditures are budgeted to increase next year, and the "cuts" refer to even larger amounts requested during the budget process.

I assume this is the beginning of a campaign to make those concerned about the school budget/quality feel guilty or stand accused of being "anti-education." I think some facts are in order.

Cohasset's 1998 cost per day per pupil was $6,378, 22 percent higher than the state average of $5,208, and 13 percent higher than Hingham. In fact, our per pupil costs are higher than 90 percent of the state's school districts. With special education included, our cost was $7,269/pupil, 14 percent higher than the state and 13 percent higher than Hingham. Even more worrisome, our costs are going up faster than the state average.

The state's education foundation suggests minimum expenditures for schools, and Cohasset's expenditure in '98 was 131 percent of this level. Teachers' salaries were 165 percent, clerical expense 236 percent, athletics 227 percent, and SPED 317 percent. Our teachers' maximum salary in '97-'98 was $56,488, 13 percent over the state average maximum of $49,982. This was before last year's addition of salary step 13 and this year's proposed step 14.

Cohasset's student-teacher ratio was 15.7 ('97-'98), compared with 18 statewide. And yet on the MCAS testing, 72 percent of our fourth-graders Needed Improvement/Failed in English, 59 percent of our eighth-graders NI/F in science, and 48 percent of our 10th graders NI/F in math. These were better results than the dismal state averages, but nothing to be proud of.

Living with Proposition 2.5 would give our schools a 3.4 percent increase to $8.5 M in Fiscal 2000. That should be enough to work with, while putting our principal attention on how to improve the quality of our educational results.

School budget opponents absent

TO THE EDITOR:

On Monday night the school committee, school administration and principals met to review and discuss the various cuts that would have to be made in the event that the various overrides failed to pass. Everyone in attendance was given the opportunity to ask questions, bring forward ideas and to disagree with the proposed cuts. I was extremely disappointed that there were no opponents of the School budget at this meeting to engage in a dialogue of understanding and education. We have heard much rhetoric from the opponents criticizing the school budget. This was a 'golden' opportunity missed to ask questions and receive a better understanding of the issues that would have been useful to the community at large.

Kitchen tour support

TO THE EDITOR:

The South Shore Community Center's third annual kitchen tour was a huge success with more than 600 in attendance this year! The five fantastic kitchens plus samplings from each of the caterers were out of this world. A "special thanks" to the Larson, Chastain, Stone, Blain, and Oswald families for opening up their homes. We would like to thank the following caterers who contributed this year at each home:

Z-Chef, Kinnealey Meats, The Silent Chef, Circe's Grotto, The Borrowed Butler, Bernard's, Seasons Cafe & Deli.

We would also like to thank the following interior designers:

Donna Blain and Jill Tedeschi; Millie Oswald; Arlene Ferreira of Country House Antiques & Interiors of Cohasset; Robin Pelissier of Robin's Nest, Hingham; Mary Larson; Kate Dickerson; Trompe L'Oeil Upholstered Accessories.

The Center would like to thank all of the many people who helped to make this event possible:

HEALTH NOTES

Little Harbor water quality study starts

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

On Wednesday May 5, the Water Quality study of Little Harbor will begin. The first part of the study will be a sanitary study where the contractor will be responsible for a survey of the perimeter of Little Harbor at low tide.

In a student activity coordinated and paid for by the Cohasset Lobster Lab under a grant from the State's Executive Office of Environmental Affaairs, about 40 Cohasset High School Students under the guidance of teachers will provide additional support. These groups, accompanied by the personnel from Camp Dresser & McKee (CDM), will walk over selected sites around the perimeter. They will be looking for unusual water flow such as pipes and discharges, groundwater breakouts, coloration and odors.

Some locations on the perimeter may not be accessible from the shore and some survey teams may need to use boats.

Data will be recorded in a data base, and entered on a map of Little Harbor, which CDM will use together with other facts make their analysis.

Following the survey, samples of water will be taken for analysis from selected sites, and the results added to the data base. CDM has a protocol for taking and evaluating water samples, from twelve sites throughout Little Harbor and upper Little Harbor. However, most of the samples will be collected by High School students who will be taking data under teacher supervision. This activity also funded by the Cohasset Lobster Lab, will occur once a week all through the summer.

Infrared cameras will be used to detect differences in water temperature along the shoreline and throughout the harbor. These thermal differences can indicate possible groundwater sources of pollution to the harbor, such as failed septic systems. Such measurements have been used in aerial surveys to plot pollution plumes from land fills and other environmental hazards, but the method has seldom been used for local surveys.

Finally, CDM will conduct a thorough flushing study of Little Harbor. This will determine the ability of the tidal flow into and out of Little Harbor to carry away pollutants by identifying pockets of water that is not carried out by tidal flow. CDM is charged with making recommendations regarding these pockets of potential pollution.

After all the data are gathered, CDM will analyze and summarize the findings from the various activities. Hopefully, we will have a complete picture of the condition of Little Harbor and what to do about any pollution. One objective is to get Little Harbor clean enough to support opening the clam and mussel beds.

Cleaning up the harbor will probably require a combination of activities: stop septic system pollution from entering the water; minimize pollution from stormwater runoff which enters the water from catch basins and road runoff; reduce the use of lawn chemicals and fertilizers on lawns.

Combining all of these activities and working with others in the watershed, we hope to be able to reverse the trend of ever increasing pollution of our regions waterways.

Kidde Safety Recalls two types of Carbon Monoxide Alarms

In cooperation with the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Kidde Safety, of Mebane NC is voluntarily recalling about 1 million carbon monoxide alarms, including about 650,000 Nighthawks, and 350,000 Lifesavers. The Lifesavers could alarm late or not alarm at all, and the Nighthawks could alarm late. The Nighthawk models included in this recall are all models manufactured between November 8, 1998 and March 9, 1999. The Lifesaver models are 9C0-1C manufactured between June 1, 1997 and January 31, 1998. If you have one of these alarms call the Kidde toll free number 888 543-3346 or visit their website at www.nhawk.com.

Reappearance of Amy and Joey

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Monica and Bill? The bombing in Kosovo? The high school in Littleton, Colo.? Think you've seen and heard everything? Well, our eyes and ears are about to be abused by an even older friend, who is coming back to annoy us.

Amy Fisher, that's who!

You remember Amy, don't you. The Monica Lewinsky of her day. The teen-aged "Long Island Lolita" whose affair with Joey Buttafuoco reached such an intensity that she shot Joey's wife, Mary Jo, to get her out of the way.

Amy, now 24, is about to be released Aug. 26 after serving six years of a five-to-15-year jolt in an upstate women's slammer in Albion, N. Y., and then . . . heaven help us!

Even before the barred doors of Nassau County jail clanged shut behind him, the Buttafuocos had "earned" $200,000 acting as consultants to one of three made-for-TV movies about their case and they had made an appearance on the "Donahue Show."

Think of the dozens of TV cameras that will be yanked off such lesser events like Kosovo and the gallons of printer's ink that will be devoted to bringing the next chapter in Amy's story to her public.

Already, according to her lawyer, Bruce Barket, his client has received calls from the "Today" show, from "Good Morning America," and from "Larry King Live." Can Pat Robinson be far behind?

The latest word out of Mineola, N.Y., is that Amy has apologized to Mary Jo and Mary Jo, who still carries the bullet in her head, has accepted the apology so we may be treated to the Amy & Mary Jo Show.

Meanwhile, Joey, who also made up with Mary Jo after he served a six- month sentence for statutory rape (Amy was 16 at the time). They now live in Santa Monica, Calif., so that Joey can further his acting career.

Already he has made at least one movie, playing a cab driver with a speaking role in a picture called "Cul-de-Sac." I haven't seen it but I am told that Tom Hanks and his Oscar are not in imminent danger.

Even before the barred doors of Nassau County jail clanged shut behind him, the Buttafuocos had "earned" $200,000 acting as consultants to one of three made-for-TV movies about their case and they had made an appearance on the "Donahue Show."

At one time, there were no less than three TV movies of the Fisher-Buttafuoco affair showing at the same time and at least three books have been written, including one called "My Story" which promised "Amy's personal story in photos, many never before seen." And probably never again, either.

A book called "He Said/She Said Comics" claims to tell both sides of the story taken from their interviews and, as an added inducement to buy the book, the publisher, 1st Amendment Publishing, includes a full color pinup of Amy in short-shorts.

While she was in the slam for shooting Mary Jo, and while Joey was still denying he had sex with her, Amy even had a song written about her, the chorus of which went:

"Shame on Amy, shame on you, making up stories you wish were true.

"Only 17 going on 32, shame on Amy, shame on you."

Okay. We're ready. You can let her loose!

Selectmen outline override options

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen outlined a worst-case scenario of cuts to town services that will be warranted if voters reject the three overrides they will choose from on the May 22 special town election ballot.

When voters defeated the $766,000 Proposition 2-1/2 override at the polls, selectmen were left with a FY2000 town budget proposed at the March town that needed a total rewrite.

The end result is three proposed overrides—$612,895; $509,554 and $380,000—which will be reviewed at the May 17 special town meeting. Selectmen will then make a motion to continue discussion of the article until 7:30 p.m., May 24, the following week, since no vote will have been taken at the May 17 meeting.

Voters will decide on the various overrides at the May 22 special town election.

The May 24 town meeting will determine the budget based on the highest approved override figure. Should voters decide against all three overrides, the entire $766,000 will be cut.

The school budget — including teachers' health insurance, pension and life insurance and debt service on the new athletic field and school — makes up about 58 percent of the total budget. The schools' share of the deficit will reflect that percentage.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who has been vocal in her opposition to school teachers step salary raises, unsuccessfully argued against that proposal, saying that the school budget "caused this [override] to fail in the first place and we're making cuts to help the school committee."

Sullivan also objected to selectman Ronnie McMorris' proposal to reinstate planned cuts of $12,000 to the library trustees for a part-time worker and $4,000 funding for Elder Affairs programs which will be drawn from a hydrant rental fee the selectmen decided to cut. She said that she didn't think it was fair to "have someone voted on who's not on the budget."

Chairman Merle Brown told Sullivan that everyone has a right to lobby and town manager Mark Haddad pointed out that the library trustees were in his weekly report.

The worst case scenario for the budget amounts to $320,452 and includes the following cuts:

- $8,000 for seasonal officers and $47,700 for two replacements cruisers for the police department.
- $106,000 of the fire department's hydrant fees and $10,000 in overtime pay.
- $6,873 for the DPW's summer employees, $7,000 for street lighting, $3,300 for clerical salaries, as well a new $43,000 maintenance division.
- $11,500 for a proposed-part-time library technician.
- $15,000 for The Recreation Department's teen coordinator position.
- $4,000 in Council on Aging program funds.
- $45,000 from the health insurance budget.
- $2,500 for assessors' map maintenance.
- $2,000 from the proposed veterans' agent salary.
- $2,305 for the Social Service League's public health nursing services.

At the top two override levels — $612,895 and $509,554 — the DPW would regain its summer workers and clerical money and the assessors would have their map maintenance funds. The fire department would regain its overtime funding.

All of the override levels would allow police to regain their seasonal officers and one cruiser; the new DPW maintenance division would be returned to the budget; as would nursing services for the Social Service League.

Street lighting, the teen coordinator position and the proposed raise for the veterans' agent's pay will not be returned to the budget, no matter what occurs at town election.

Haddad said that he urged people to read his eight-page report, which will be in the mail this weekend.

"I know there's some confusion out there, so if anyone has a question, call me at 383-4105," he said.

Override season is full of uncertainty deficit lost by a 60-to-40 percent margin.

The May 22 special election will be sandwiched between two sessions of the special town meeting. The first will explain the cuts under the different scenarios and the second session will appropriate the budget up to the highest override approved. If no override is approved then about $766,000 will have to be slashed from the total budget at that time.

"Is this approach cast in concrete?" asked Dan Evans of the advisory committee. "I must say I am not convinced it's fair to ask voters to show up and not change the appropriation — to just show up and ask town meeting to pass whatever."

Further complicating the matter is that under state law, a simple majority approves an override. That means that if the highest override is passed by two votes and the lowest override wins by a 200-vote margin — the highest override still wins. Town meeting can appropriate up to the highest figure.

That makes advisor Deborah Shadd a little uneasy.

"Aren't people going to argue that the town wants the lower figure?" she asked referring to a scenario in which the lowest figure wins the biggest majority.

Rick Flynn warned town meeting could have a mind of its own.

"If enough people go to town meeting, anything could happen," he said.

There will be three override questions on the ballot.

If none of the questions wins a simple majority, the taxes on the so-called average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will increase $133 in fiscal year 2000 which begins July 1. A tax rate of $15.34 per $1,000 of assessed valuation is needed to cover the town's operating budget without an override. By state law, the town cannot increase its tax levy by more than 2-1/2 percent without an override. The $133 tax increase represents that 2-1/2 percent on the average home.

The proposed overrides are as follows:

- $380,000 — tax rate would be $15.74 and taxes would increase an additional $136.49 over the 2-1/2 percent allowed for a total of $269.49 ($133 +136.49 = $269.49).
- $509,000 — tax rate, $15.88, taxes increase an additional $184.21 for a total of $317.25.
- $612,000 — tax rate, $15.99, taxes increase an additional $221.70 for a total of $354.77.

It's important to remember that under Prop. 2-1/2 the taxes go up $133 on the average home no matter what happens at the polls.

Advisor Deborah Shadd said the menu approach means town officials don't really know what the taxpayers want.

"The whole set up is a way of asking the town, 'what did you mean?'" she said.

Lee Jenkins said elected officials weren't doing their job by giving the voters a number they can agree on.

"They are asking the electorate to give them a number," Jenkins said. "They are elected to make decisions and they are not making them. They are turning them back to the taxpayers."

There was considerable discussion among advisory committee members on what feedback they'd received from voters.

The consensus seemed to be that some voted no on the override because they simply couldn't afford the tax hike while others voted no because they perceive there is too much fat in the budget. Some were misinformed about what goes into the town's operating budget and others wanted to send a message that structural changes in the budget are needed, advisors said.

But regardless of what message the voters sent the weeks ahead would be a challenge, advisory board chairman Dick Avery said.

"It's complicated, it's risky but I guess it's expedient," he said about the current budget process.

Members agreed that the town couldn't live within 2-1/2 percent if it continues to give employees three percent raised on top of step increases. Seventy-to-80 percent of the total budget is salaries.

"We can't afford 6 percent raises," Grant said. "But how you turn around the Titanic, I don't know."

School budgets project teacher and supply cuts

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

School committee members have made it clear: No matter which of the four possible override scenarios voters choose, teachers, students' extra curricular activities (especially sports) and student supplies will lose out.

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey told school committee members that "the different override options range from negative to devastating in their effects on the school department and its services to children."

The worst case scenario of a vote against all three overrides would be "the death knell for Cohasset schools," he said.

School committee members described the following cuts for each override:

• The $612,000 override would amount to $54,000 taken from the new Joseph Osgood Elementary, Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle-High Schools, which would cut into supplies, as well as the Middle-High School's late bus and after-school transportation.

• The $509,000 override would take $148,000 from the school budget. That would translate to additional cuts to those listed above. The Osgood would lose a playground aide, a part-time custodian and a variety of educational resources gained from teachers' conferences, journals, professional dues, travel and higher education funds for staff. Deer Hill considered cutting a fourth-grade teacher, but the school committee chose to replace a guidance counselor set for retirement with a lower-paid employee. The Middle-High School would reduce its instrumental-music teacher to a part-time position and would cut ice hockey entirely, reduce certain athletic programs (boys and girls soccer and basketball) and cut money for sports uniforms and bus trips.

• The $380,000 override, amounting to a school-side reduction of $223,000, would bring the Osgood down to a bare bones budget of math, phonics and spelling texts which parents would be asked to fill in by purchasing their children's crayon, scissors and paper supplies. Deer Hill would have to let go of its fourth grade teacher and the Middle-High School would lose its freshman boys' basketball program, junior varsity field hockey, soccer and basketball, and would reduce a physical education teacher's time by half. A world language teacher might also be eliminated. The athletic director would teach full-time.

The worst case scenario of a no-override budget would mean a school reduction of $455,000, amounting to $432,000 in cuts to the schools.

Should that happen, additional cuts would include: Osgood teachers' supplies leaving them $200 each to spend for the entire year; the elimination of kindergarten gym ; a fourth- and sixth-grade teacher at Deer Hill, which would result in sixth-grade class sizes of 28-29 students, more supply items; and the Middle-High School guidance counselor and instrumental music.

'Buck-a-bag' back on table

Haddad said that the sticker fee increase will keep the percentage of coverage to the budget relatively the same as in the past.

The new stickers will be available beginning May 15 at the RTF office on weekends, as well as at the DPW and town hall. Early birds may be able to get the stickers as early as this weekend at the RTF office.

Citizens did not show for the pre-announced 8:30 p.m. agenda topic at the selectmen's meeting, where raising the stickers fees for the Recycling Transfer Facility was discussed.

Haddad said that tipping fees which the town pays to SEMASS are now $4.69 a ton.

That figure has led Selectman Thomas Callahan to push for the buck-a-bag program, which encourages people to cut down on waste through recycling.

"A lot more towns are switching to buck-a-bag," he said. "We have a concrete financial problem; we're paying for all that waste when a good amount of it could be recycled."

Haddad said that as of July 1, Scituate will provide residents with 50 bags along with their $50 dump sticker so the supply amounts to a dollar-per-bag equivalent of the sticker price.

"The $50 sticker is still done, but you get 50 bags up front for it," said Haddad.

Haddad estimates that the sticker increase will bring in $21,000.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said that beach and RTF permits are expiring and stickers will be on sale at town hall starting May 17.

The current stickers, which will expire May 31, 2000, will also be on sale at the DPW building. The DPW is open Monday to Friday, from 9 to 3 p.m.

(Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60.)

People applying for new permits should bring vehicle registrations or proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). Stickers can also be purchased through the mail by sending in a copy of registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Committee for Quality Town Services launches campaign

The following is a press release from the Committee for Quality Town Services

The Committee for Quality Town Services (CQTS) has announced that it is organizing a volunteer committee to protect Cohasset's outstanding town services and school system and preserve the quality of life in Cohasset for all residents. CQTS will work to urge voters to vote YES for all three Proposition 2-1/2 override questions on the ballot for Saturday, May 22.

The goal of CQTS is to ensure that Cohasset protects its standing as one of the top education systems in the state of Massachusetts, as well as to protect the property values, town services and superior quality of life that residents enjoy. On Saturday, May 22, Cohasset citizens will decide on the future of our schools and level of town services. Voting YES on Questions 1a, 1b, and 1c will protect valuable student programs and vital town services at a reasonable increase of about $222 annually per average household or about 61 cents a day.

CQTS encourages volunteers and supporters from Cohasset to join with them in ensuring protection of schools, town services and property values. For more information or to donate or volunteer, call Sue Wilcox at 383-1998 or Lucia Flibotte at 383-2792.

Special education workshop set

It is estimated that at least 1-3 percent of American school children are diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD). In addition, many of these children have difficulty with auditory processing (CAPD). This workshop for parents and educators will provide an overview of these disorders, their relationship to each other, information on assessment and treatment as well as implications for the home and the classroom. This workshop, presented by Suzanne Harris, Senior SLP, Healthsouth Braintree Pediatric Center, will focus on these issues from a speech and language perspective. There will be an opportunity for questions and answers.

It will be held Wednesday, May 5 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Town Hall, 220 Central St. and is sponsored by the Hingham 766 Parent's Advisory Council.

For additional information, call Irene Sinclair at 781-749-6942.

Celebrating diversity program May 2

The Cohasset Diversity Committee invites you to its second annual community wide CELEBRATE DIVERSITY exposition. This upbeat andinspirational event will happen on Sunday, May 2 from 4-to-6 p.m. at Cohasset's Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Avenue (next to the Cohasset Town Hall).

Please join the Diversity Committee, METCO Committee, local clergy, students and neighbors in this upcoming Celebration of Diversity through music, dance, song, art work and poetry — as we all work together towards gaining a better understanding and appreciation of tolerance and diversity in our own community and the wider world.

New Greenbush coordinator on board

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Kevin Dasey may have started only nine days ago as the MBTA's new senior project coordinator for the beleaguered Greenbush rail project, but he's hardly a novice in the longstanding battles over the MBTA's restoration of the Old Colony Line.

"I have 10 years of involvement at the local level in Braintree," said the 6 ft.3 in., red-haired Braintree resident, explaining why he was chosen out of 21 candidates for the $50,000-a-year position.

As senior project coordinator, Dasey — who recently sold his Hanover-based hardware manufacturing and distributing business — will assist in the planning, development and administration of the Greenbush construction project.

He will work with legislators, town officials, planning boards, abutters, commuter advocacy groups and other interested parties, in addition to other duties.

Dasey served as the co-chairman of Braintree's Greenbush mitigation committee since its inception in 1990, which was formed to deal with the impact of the Plymouth and Middleboro commuter lines that run through Braintree.

"We had to become familiar with the project and look out for the town interests," explained Dasey, about his reasons for embroiling himself in the contentious train discussions.

The 17.7-mile branch from Braintree to the Greenbush section of Scituate was slated to begin operations in 1997 along with the Plymouth and Middleboro lines, but opponents sidetracked the project by raising fears about the train's environmental impact, potential damage to historic Hingham Square, as well as train safety issues.

Dasey was successful in the past with getting federal officials to make the MBTA study the noise impact of Old Colony train whistles and he worked for increased noise mitigation around the tracks. He also proposed changes to ease traffic around the stations.

He hopes to help citizen committees in the Greenbush towns communicate better with the MBTA.

"Basic communications with the T have been a problem with citizen committees, due to the T's vast bureaucracy," he said. "The T has recognized that difficulty and feel it should have one person to make life easier for the committees."

Dasey has resigned as Braintree representative to the state-appointed Citizens Advisory Committee on Greenbush due to conflicts with his new position. The CAC was appointed by the state secretary of environmental affairs to comment on the MBTA's Greenbush environmental feasibility studies.

Hingham's Alexander Macmillan, who is opposed to the train, served along with Dasey on the CAC.

"We've had a very good relationship and I respect him a great deal," said Macmillan. "But I don't think it matters who's in the position since I'm not sure that the appointment of a Greenbush coordinator is going to make a difference."

Macmillan believes that the new position was created to appease pro-train people.

"The T is, I think, responding to criticism from some of the pro-train people that they haven't 'sold' their product and so the silent majority isn't being heard," said Macmillan. "The T needed a public relations person and that was the impetus to Joe Sullivan and Frank Hynes to push for this." (Sullivan, D-Braintree, is chairman of the Legislature's Transportation Committee).

Rep. Hynes (D-Marshfield, Scituate), a longtime supporter of the proposed $285 million rail restoration, wrote then Secretary of Transportation Patrick Moynihan last September, asking MBTA officials to work toward being a better and more responsive neighbor. He told Moynihan that MBTA officials had failed to address the many environmental and safety questions raised by residents and town officials in Scituate and throughout the rail corridor.

Hynes said that he shares in the general frustration with the T.

"They seem to be either absent or deaf at that point, so I kind of understand people's frustration," he said. "My hope is that the T's hiring of this individual demonstrates a good faith effort on its part to reopen the discussion on Greenbush in terms of what's best for the communities," he said.

Brian Pedro, an MBTA spokesman, said that he thinks Dasey will help to bring word back from the communities to the T.

"There are meetings often several nights a row in different towns," he said. "It's hard to get to all of them and communicate effectively what's gone on."

But Nancy Buckley, who spearheaded the grassroots anti-Greenbush Coastal Coalition, agrees with Macmillan that the MBTA created the position basically as a public relations move to "assuage the people who are hoping to see the train built."

Kevin Dasey

Still, Dasey is seen as the best person for the position, Buckley said.

"Coming from Braintree, living with the reality of the Red Line and two Old Colony lines so he understands how it has changed the community," she said. "He's seen how it's transformed Braintree into a different town than it was 25 years ago when it was a very quiet place. Now it's a very congested place. I know, because I went Archbishop Williams High School, which is where Dasey graduated from, too. It was a very quiet town then."

Thomas Gruber, chairman of Cohasset's Mitigation Committee, said time will tell how effective Dasey can be as a liaison for towns along the Greenbush corridor.

"If he's a serious guy, then I think he has some yeoman's work ahead of him, but I don't know how much attention the T will pay to him," he said. "If he's a figurehead, there's not much he can do anyway. We'll know better when we see what he does for us."

Eminent domain may be imminent for water tank

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission has tried its best to avoid taking by eminent domain a half-acre of land on Scituate Hill for a new water tank. Their efforts have met with little apparent success. A few months ago, the water commissioners negotiated a deal that seemed acceptable to the town and the owner of the property, J. Michael Susi and Sons. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the water commissioners haven't heard from Susi since they negotiated a verbal agreement with his attorneys. McNabb said the water commissioners cannot wait any longer.

The water commission will meet on May 13 to discuss the possibility of taking the land for the water tank by eminent domain. The commissioners have already given Susi the legally required 30 days notice needed to seize his property. McNabb said that unless Susi contacts the water commissioners to complete the deal, they will probably vote to take the land by eminent domain. If the water commissioners approve the eminent domain taking, they only have to wait for town counsel to record the action with the Registry of Deeds to complete the seizure.

McNabb said the water commissioners still hope to strike a last minute deal with Susi. That seems unlikely, however, because no one from Susi has contacted the water commission in many weeks.

"We've been patient until now," McNabb said. "The only reason we took this step is because we haven't heard from Susi. We don't know why the negotiations stopped. We've been trying very hard to avoid protracted legal battles."

The Mariner could not reach Susi for comment.

Last February, the water commissioners believed they had struck a deal to purchase the land they needed for the tank. McNabb said the commissioners had planned to purchase the 1/2-acre of land for $32,500, based on its assessed value of $65,000 per acre. The deal also would have allowed Susi to collect 50 percent of any fees collected from telecommunications companies leasing the top of the tank for cellular telephone antennas.

"We don't know why the negotiations stopped. We've been trying very hard to avoid protracted legal battles."
— Water Commissioner John McNabb

"We had agreed an a site and the antenna fees," McNabb said. "But we've received no response from Susi. All we want is a response. He could ask for a higher price than $32,500 for the land. We're open to more negotiations and a counter-offer, but time is running out."

The commission also plans to obtain a temporary construction easement over Susi's property to build the tank.

If the commissioners vote to take the land, then they must follow a three-step process to build the tank. First, they must obtain a height variance from the zoning board. Then, they need site-plan approval from the planning board. Finally, the commissioners need a lengthy approval from the Department of Environmental Protection, a process that could take 90 days to complete.

The water commission has been trying build a second water tank since 1997. The commission wanted to build the second tank on Bear Hill next to the town's only other water container. But residents living near Bear Hill opposed the proposal. The water commission settled on an alternative location on Scituate Hill at the 62-acre Norfolk Conveyor site.

The water commissioners preferred buying the land because then they would know the exact cost of the project. Previously, McNabb said the deal to purchase the land could have left the water commission with a cash surplus of as much as $500,000. The water commission estimates the cost of building the 1.8 million gallon steel tank at about $1.065 million. The tank would be 65 feet high and 70 feet in diameter. The water commission has set aside $1.6 million for the tank. McNabb said any money not spent on the actual tank project could be used to fund other projects and keep water bills at current levels

The water commission also need another half-acre of land for an access road and pipe. The water commissioners are working on a deal to build an access road on a half-acre of land located on a nearby site owned by Paul Barry. McNabb said the commissioners are working with Barry to obtain the land for the road in exchange for providing him with two connection stubs from the 12-inch water pipe that would carry water from the tank to dwellings. The pipe would run directly under the 20-30 foot wide access road.

Littleton, Colorado tragedy raises safety questions commented.

School committee member Stephanie Noble noted that a couple of parents had contacted her to ask if the school was going to address the Columbine High School tragedy.

Collins answered that "our hearts go out to everyone in Colorado and certainly, our thoughts and prayers go with them. Rest assured we'll be reviewing our own security issues here."

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey understands that many in the community feel some concern at this time about security issues in the school, but unlike Noble, he hasn't received any phone calls on the issue.

Malvey said that the school has an "open campus" where seniors are allowed to leave the building for lunch.

Principal Collins pointed out that locked doors alone do not make a school safe. Last year, two Jonesboro Ark., boys shot at fellow students from outside their school, after they lured them from the building with a false fire alarm.

Measures to increase security are only one part of the matter.

"Cohasset's public schools are [already] security conscious, but the reality is that if some poor soul wants to create havoc in a school and doesn't care what the results are for himself or others, I don't know how we could stop that," Collins said.

When victims become victimizers

It might be assumed that such violence could never be bred in a town like Cohasset. After all, the two Columbine boys were described as outcasts; part of a fringe group dubbed "The Trenchcoat Mafia," who favored "Goth" music and violent video games like "Doom." They also were attracted by Nazism and kept an Internet Web site that showed how to build pipe bombs and put out a death threat against another student.

But behind the affected dress and preoccupation with death were two adolescent boys—frequently described by friends and neighbors as intelligent and polite scholastic achievers—who harbored deep grudges toward jocks and other popular students that they said ostracized and taunted them for being "different."

Such a scenario could happen here, said Susan Etkind, a licensed social worker and founder of the Cohasset Diversity Committee, which aims to foster a greater awareness and appreciation for cultural differences in homogenous Cohasset.

"I think what happened in Columbine is a wake-up call to all of us who say, 'That could never happen here,'" she said.

While many are saying that the school's small population creates a tight-knittedness that would prevent such an occurrence, Etkind stresses that a small student body can cause cliques to be more rigid, which can serve to disenfranchise students from each other.

"I am not an expert on the atmosphere of Cohasset High School, but I know there are cliques, and with cliques come harassment to the extent where you can't just switch tables at lunch," she said. "If you switch tables because you want to change groups, there will be questions like, 'Why is he sitting there?', 'Why did she move there?', or, 'No, you're not allowed to sit here.'"

Seemingly harmless incidents like that are only the tip of the iceberg of complaints parents have made to Etkind concerning the sometimes exclusionary atmosphere.

"We've had letters from parents who write about a swastika carved into a desk, the word 'Nigger' or 'Jew" grafiteed elsewhere, students pushed into lockers, children shunned, called names or beaten up," she said.

"People think this is such a beautiful town, that the children are so polite and everything is nice. Some parents feel that these are isolated incidents and that our group is sensationalizing the issue," Etkind added. "One teacher said to me that some of these kids drawing swastikas don't even know what they mean and that they also draw peace signs, as though the two were equivalent."

Etkind said that the schools need to be clear about such issues and deal with prejudice on a larger scale, rather than with the incident-by-incident approach they've been using.

It was such incidents that the Columbine students-turned-killers stewed with for some time before plotting their revenge. In an odd but not uncommon twist, the boys also took to racial supremacy to balm their inferiority. Nazi paraphernalia and literature was in open view in Klebold's bedroom—something which should have raised concern in his parents.

Etkind's recent letter sent home to parents detailing incidents of bullying or marginalizing in the school received mostly favorable responses, and she is hoping that parents will use the letter as a chance to discuss the incidents with their children, as well as take time to convey their values to their children.

The schools, too, attempt to do their part by offering counseling staff for students' concerns.

Collins said that the school has three counselors, one of whom is an adjustment counselor, to handle whatever personal crisis students may need to discuss.

"We have access to all kinds of outside counseling agencies, too, if a child prefers, and we used a whole host of them last June when we lost one of our students," said Collins. "The smallness of our school and the years these kids have known each other makes them almost like brothers and sisters. They play sports, live in the same neighborhood and that makes this a very unusual place. It doesn't mean that you couldn't have a major problem here, but the percentages are more in our favor in a small school."

Discussion on hate crimes

The Cohasset Diversity Committee will hold its second annual community-wide "Celebrate Diversity" exposition from 4-6 p.m., May 2 in Cohasset's Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., next to town hall.

Local clergy, students and neighbors will celebrate diversity through music, dance, song, artwork and poetry to gain a better understanding and appreciation of tolerance and diversity in the community.

Detective Rick Grassie, hate crimes officer for Cohasset for 12 years, said that he has met with Susan Etkind, president of the Diversity Committee, and agreed to speak on the issue at the exposition.

"We've had only one reported hate crime, and that was 10 years ago," said Grassie. "We all hear rumors, but hearsay is nothing unless a victim reports a crime."

Grassie said that he will explain what constitutes a hate crime and that why, without a report from a victim or eyewitness, the crime will remain nothing more than hearsay.

"You've got to have factual substance when you handle crimes," he said. "It's unfortunate if it is happening and no one is doing anything about it—that's a crime in itself."

What to do, where to go for help

An national online survey of teenagers on Bolt (http://www.bolt.com), the Internet's largest teen-focused destination for ages 15 to 19, drew 800 adolescent respondents to the question, "Could one of your classmates be a killer?" Over half (51 percent) answered "yes," 36 percent answered "maybe" and only 13 percent answered "no."

Concerns about school safety since the Columbine tragedy are occupying many people's thoughts now, children and adolescents included.

Michael Faenza, president and CEO of the National Mental Health Association (NMHA), offered the following tips on discussing the Columbine shootings with children:

- Talk honestly but without graphic detail about the incident.
- Encourage children to express their feelings about the incident.
- Limit television viewing, especially for younger children, who will have trouble processing the upsetting images of the carnage.
- Let children know that school violence is not common and schools are safe.
- Teach children about how to be safe in school and discuss specific concerns about bullying, threats or suicidal thoughts.
- Recognize children's reactions to the shootings (or any other troubles), such as wanting to avoid school or becoming argumentative or withdrawn.
- Keep dialogue open after media coverage on school safety dies down.
- Seek professional help if necessary.

The National Mental Health Association has a toll-free Information Line where parents and teachers can locate community resources. NMHA also offers informational brochures on children's mental health issues, such as a Teen Survival Guide to Surviving Stress, What Every Child Needs for Good Mental Health, and Teen Depression.

The NMHA can be reached at (800) 969-NMHA.

Learning continues for girls lacrosse

Things went pretty much as expected when the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team traveled to Hingham for a game on Tuesday.

A traditional power, the Harbormen jumped out to an 11-0 lead with ten minutes still left in the first half. Meanwhile, Cohasset, which is just in its fourth year of existence, continued to show signs of improvement and fought to keep the game respectable, losing 12-3.

"We really played together as a team, which hasn't always been the case this season," said Cohasset first-year coach Kate Brady. "I thought our girls did really well. That's a tough team to play against."

Hingham came out on the attack early and did not allow Cohasset to move the ball out of its end. Brady Garrity led the way with three goals, while Hillary Smith, Lindsey Gallant, and Catherine Clifford had two goals each.

"I'm very pleased with the way we played," said Hingham coach Heather Williams. "Ten of our goals were assisted. We did a great job passing. We don't have the league's leading scorers, but we do have people who can score. More than half of our team has put the ball in the net. Every one of our attackers has scored."

Once her team scored its 11th goal, Williams made wholesale substitutions and had the Harbormen work on controlling the ball and passing.

"We don't need to be working on our shots and running up the score," said Williams, whose team is now 7-0. "We need to be moving the ball around, working on our passing game and other things."

Cohasset, which dropped to 2-5 overall, got scores from Jen Chastain and Jackie Kahn.

"After we fell behind, we tried to break the game down into quarters," said Brady. "We wanted to win the quarters. They're learning. A lot of these girls are playing lacrosse for the first time."

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE HARDMAN

You don't want to look, but you can't turn away.

A week later, the scenes of students running from a high school building at a time when they should have been wondering what was for lunch or if they had studied enough for the English exam in the afternoon are still fresh in the mind..

It might have been a suburban town halfway across the country, but the faces looked the same as they do around here.

You've seen their look before. You see them when you go to a football game, a basketball game, a school play or stop to get a burger at the local fast food joint.

They have the look of high school students.

Behind the pain and the emotional anguish, those are the faces you see in Colorado.

You hear the shortstop at Columbine talk about the alleged gunmen, saying that where going to shoot "jocks" and minorities. You can't look away.

You don't want hear him talking about seeing fellow students bleeding from gun shots wounds. You don't want to hear him tell the fear his fellow students went through with a gun pointed at their head, not knowing if their life was seconds away from ending.

You want to hear him talk about his baseball team. Who will be Columbine's toughest opponent this year? You want to know what his college plans are?

You don't want hear to the father of the murdered student anguishing in the death of his son. Second-guessing himself about what he could have done to protect his son. As a father, you want to hug him and tell Hingham now finds itself one win short of clinching a playoff spot, which could come today when the Harbormen host Nantucket. Williams hopes her balanced attack will lead to tournament success.

"We're very well-balanced on offense and defense," said Williams. "Catherine Clifford and Kate Zahner are our two leading scorers, and Kelly Crowley has been a key factor in our defense."

Hingham has been solid in net as well.

"Carla Gigon was strong, particularly in the Sandwich game," said Williams of her goalie. "We won 10-3, but the game was closer than the score would indicate. She has an 80 percent save ratio. We've been priming sophomore Laura Settino as well."

The Harbormen are not a particularly old team.

"We have eight seniors and four freshmen," said Williams. "Freshman Meghan Marshall has done well on offense and Bridget Driscoll has been a force on defense. Junior Kerrie Lenhart has incredible speed and excellent skills. If we know the other team has a really good player, we'll put Kerrie on her."

Williams even has the luxury of having a player that can play both offense and defense.

"Sophomore Ali Aucoin is probably our most versatile player," said Williams. "She can attack and play defense. Senior Busah Romania is fearless. She's very aggressive on defense, and junior Sarah Durgin has really picked it up."

Both teams return to action today as Hingham hosts Nantucket, while Cohasset will host Duxbury.

Local gymnasts qualify for Regionals held in Methuen

Many gymnasts with South Shore Community College's "Gymnasts In Motion" will be competing in Regionals held in Methuen in early June.

In the Novice Division, Nancy Durkin and Shelley Carter qualified on all four pieces of apparatus. Teammates Amanda Faulkner, Alison Krupczak, Jackie Flint, Kelsey Bell, Shane Kelly, and Mallory Brady qualified in on tow or three events.

In the Intermediate Division 15 plus, all four gymnasts competing in this division qualified in on all four pieces of apparatus and had strong performances at the Kathy Corrigans Qualifier in Rockland.

The qualifying scores were: Carlie Carter, vault 7.50, bars 8.90, beam 7.90, floor 8.00, 32.30 AA; Chrissy Mitchell, vault 8.00, bars 7.30, beam 8.00, floor 8.10, 31.40 AA; Sara Duggan, vault 7.45, bars 8.10, beam 7.80, floor 8.00, 31.35 AA; Siobhan Hart (Qualified in on all four events at a Cape Cod Qualifier) vault 8.2, bars 7.10, beam 7.20, floor 8.2, 30.7 AA.

Youth Baseball parade on Sunday

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

By his own estimation he has been involved with the Cohasset Youth Baseball Association for over 20 years. But Leo J. Fiore downplays his role.

"I never coached or anything," said Fiore of Fiore Exxon on the corner of Beechwood and 3A. "We've just sponsored a team for the last 20 years or so."

But to the people involved in the Little League, he has done so much more.

"He's probably the longest running sponsor of Little League in Cohasset," said league president/treasurer Daniel C. Leahy. "He's given of himself and materials anytime we needed him."

So this Saturday, May 1 the Cohasset Youth Baseball Association. will again present the Leo J. Fiore Award in recognition of continuos and positive support of the youth baseball program in Cohasset. This year's recipients is the Cohasset Policeman's Association. The ceremonies will be held at 9 a.m. at Barnes Field.

"We started the award to recognize certain individuals or groups who have sponsored teams without any private motivation," said Leahy. "We wanted to recognize the people who don't have kids playing, but just want to sponsor."

Fiore can't figure out what all the fuss is about.

"I think it's great," said Fiore, who avoids participating in the ceremonies but will have one his children involved. "We're very proud of it. Although I find the whole thing a little embarrassing."

In the past, Fiore has sent his sons to take his place. This year, his daughter Tina will be doing the honors.

"He's always been there financially," said Leahy. "He donates the bunting that we use on the fence for the opening day and the all-star game. That's stuff we couldn't afford."

There will also be a police car leading the parade, as well as a 1956 turquoise Thunderbird donated by Bob Moody. Mary Jeannette Murray will throw out the first pitch. Last year's major league champions, the Pirates, will receive trophies, while the 11-year old all stars who won the District 8 championship will also be honored.

Applications available for the 1999 season Cohasset Sailing Club

Applications for the 1999 season were mailed to all Cohasset residents April 20. Preparations, facility and equipment upgrades and repairs are under way for the 1999 season at the Cohasset Sailing Club. Docks will be going into the water at the beginning of May. Adult training programs will begin the weekend of June 26 and 27 and Junior Sailing Classes begin Monday, June 28.

Cohasset Sailing Club is a non-profit organization that offers junior (10 to 16 years old) and adult (17 and over) training programs on a fleet of 10, 15' Cape Cod Mercuries, four Turnabouts, two Club 420s and two Flying Scots. The learning process includes a combination of classroom instruction and sailing. At the junior level, two hour classes are given three days a week at four different levels of sailing ability. CSC's Junior Training Program has experienced a resurgence over the past few years with an increase in the number of participants and retention of a higher number of these sailors to the ages of 15 or 16. In addition to the number of participants, more sailors in the Junior Program are participating in regattas away from Cohasset Harbor. Each adult training course is given once a week for three hours. A special Women's Open Sailing session will take place Monday evenings from 6 p.m. until sunset.

him it will be all right someday.

But, it won't be.

A promising young man's life was ended on an afternoon when he should have been worrying about anything else besides being gunned down by a fellow classmate just because of the color of his skin or whether they played a sport.

You watch the video of the girls basketball coach that gave his life in attempting to save his student. You see him waving the microphone in front of his face as he talked about the team and their accomplishments.

You've been to those banquets. You've seen the pride in the parents' faces when the time rolls around for the coach to talk about their kid.

You know the video of the event will be played over and over again in remembering a special time in their lives.

Dave Sanders, the coach. You don't know him, but you know coaches like him. The kind that give up hours and hours of their time to coach and teach high school students. They give up vacations so they can instruct at a practice or coach in game.

You hope the Dave Sanders of the world are always around to coach and teach.

You see the faces of his girls as they talk about their coach with love and respect. You've heard that before about coaches and you hope you never stop hearing about it.

You learn about Columbine, but for all the wrong reasons.

In the sports world, you should know that Columbine girls soccer team is ranked number 10 in the nation in the National Soccer Coaches Association/Adidas poll. Before the tragedy the team had a 9-1 record.

The more you learn, the more you realize that Columbine is a school in a nice suburb of Denver where people save up their hard earned money to buy a nice house and attempt to live out the American Dream.

Just like the towns around here. Take out Denver and insert Boston and you could be talking about towns here.

But, there's one big difference.

The rest of the country isn't reading, watching and listening to our tragedy.

From now on, Columbine will be shown the next time there's a school tragedy, just like the people of Springfield, Oregon, Paducah, Kentucky and Jonesboro, Arkansas are re-living the nightmares they went through when their schools were taken over by gunmen.

You'll hear the voices from Columbine. The fathers. The mothers. The town officials, and most of all the students.

You know they will be a subject of the debates on the countless of talk shows that fill the airwaves.

They'll talk about what's wrong with kids, too much rock music, video games and blame Hollywood. You'll hear how our schools should become fortresses. You'll hear parents accused of neglecting their children and not understanding the warning signs. You'll hear the schools and police blamed. You'll hear the debate about how athletes are placed above the other students.

You've heard that all before. Debate is healthy, according to the experts. You hope somehow there is a solution to this so you don't read or watch another tragedy at another high school somewhere.

But, the debate can wait.

Right now, you just can't get the faces out of your mind.

You've seen them before. You've watched them go on to be successful in life and start families of their own, something the Columbine murdered students will never get a chance to do.

That's the thought you can't get out of your mind.

Early morning bird walk at World's End

The Trustees of Reservations will conduct an early morning bird walk at World's End on Saturday, May 8, beginning at 7 a.m., rain or shine.

Plan to spend a couple of enjoyable hours with recreational birder Kevin Godfrey as he leads the search for both migratory and field-nesting species on this beautiful property.

Members of The Trustees of Reservations will be admitted for free, non-members must pay the $4 entrance fee. Meet in front of the Ranger Station.

World's End, a peninsula of two glacial drumlins joined by a narrow beach of rough sand, divides Hingham Bay and the historic Weir River. For over a century, this 251-acre property has been admired for its dramatic topography and magnificent landscaping.

Its winding, tree-lined roadways were designed by famed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted in 1890 as part of a proposal to develop World's End as a "planned community" of more than 150 homes. The proposal never came to pass and the land was farmed and maintained by its owners as a private park. In 1967, through an extraordinary public and private effort, World's End was saved from development and The Trustees was able to purchase the property and preserve it in perpetuity.

To reach World's End, follow Summer St. from the rotary at Hingham Harbor 1/4 mile to the first set of traffic lights and turn left onto Martin's Lane. Follow Martin's Lane 1/4 mile to its end where the entrance to World's End is located.

For more informatin, please call Marge Balzotti at The Trustees' southeast regional office at 781-821-2977.

Bike safety day

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School will hold a "Bring-A-Bike Day" Trike-A-Thon May 5 at the Nursery School (May 6, rain date).

This event was developed by St. Jude Children's Research Hospital with the help of early childhood development specialists.

How it works: Children, with the help of their parents, obtain sponsors who either give a flat donation of $5, $10, $25 or more, or pledge 25 cents, 50 cents or more per lap. On the day of the event, children ride the nursery school tricycles around the school playground. The children then collect their pledges after the event.

The "Bring-A-Bike Day" Trike-A-Thon raises funds to continue the hospital's programs of research, patient care and education into childhood cancers and other catastrophic diseases. This event also exposes pre-schoolers to using riding toys safely through a week-long fun activity and provides a parent-awareness program that involves the parents in safe behavior practices to help ensure their child's well-being.

Community health awareness day

The Social Service League and the Cohasset Board of Health will present Community Health Awareness Day on Thursday, May 6, 1999 form 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church Hall, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, Ma.

Free Health screenings offered during the day include: blood pressure and pulse, weight and height, blood sugar, cholesterol, cataract and glaucoma, a hearing test, and spinal alignment.

There will be two alternative medicine therapists at the fair this year, Yvette Ratenbury, a Reiki holistic healing therapist and Joanne Ilacqua, a massage therapist. They will discuss and demonstrate the benefits of relaxation and massage.

A representative from the American Cancer society will be on hand with the Skin Saver Machine, and samples of skin protection creams and lotions, as well as an informative video on skin care.

Literature will be offered by the American Cancer Society regarding breast exam techniques and mammography screening. Please note: The Mobile Diagnostics, Inc. Mammography Van will be in Cohasset on Saturday, October 9, from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., in the Town Hall parking lot. Appointments are necessary and can be made the day of the Healthfair or by calling the Social Service League office, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Pharmacists from Walgreen's will be available to discuss both prescriptions and over the counter drugs, as well as interactions with other medications and alcohol.

The hearing test will be conducted by the Guild for the Hard of Hearing and will be underwritten by the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank.

Healthy snacks and refreshments will be provided by Stop and Shop, Shaw's Market, Dunkin Donuts, and the Atlantic Bagel Co.

Cancer Relay for Life is recruiting

The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life at the Cohasset High School wants teams to take action in the fight against cancer May 21-22, walking or running 'round the track, 'round the clock.

According to Relay co-chairs Victor Vanderlugt and Craig Bleicken, the American Cancer Society hopes to raise $45,000 at this year's Cohasset Relay, through participants collecting sponsorships from friends, family members and coworkers.

"The American Cancer Society is seeking people to form teams for the Relay," Vanderlugt said. "Beginning at 3 p.m. Friday, each team keeps a representative on the track for 24 hours, with members walking in half-hour shifts," he said. A candlelight ceremony begins the "night shift" to remember loved ones who have fought cancer. Team members are encouraged to camp out around the track throughout the night and enjoy the activities and camaraderie of the event.

"I encourage anyone interested in joining the Relay for Life to call the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600," Bleicken said. "The Relay is a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something fun to support the American Cancer Society's research, education and patient service programs."

Funds raised during the Relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs and research.

Pilgrim Co-op of Cohasset is sponsoring the "Cancer Survivors Reception" Friday evening, May 21. If you or your company is interested in becoming a sponsor or making an in-kind donation for the Cohasset Relay for Life, call Mary Shepherd at your local American Cancer Society office at (508) 584-9600.

'Guys and Dolls' on stage

Hingham Civic Music Theatre (HCMT) will present Frank Loesser's popular musical "Guys and Dolls" May 14, 15, 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. and May 23 at 2 p.m. at the new Hingham Civic Center's Sanborn Auditorium. For tickets or more information, call Faye O'Brien at (781) 749-0857.

"Guys and Dolls" is being directed by Debbie Rawson of Braintree. Musical direction is provided by John Duff of Quincy and choreography by Tina Combs-Fabrizio of Whitman. "Guys and Dolls" boasts a large cast that features many residents of Hingham and other South Shore communities.

Hingham residents Joel Leonard and Kathy Campbell are featured as Big Jule and General Cartwright.

Originally performed on Broadway in 1950 starring Vivian Blaine, the 1955 hit movie version also starred Frank Sinatra and Marlon Brando. The smash 1992 Broadway revival won three Tony awards.

"Guys and Dolls," a favorite of many theatre lovers, is the first to be staged at HCMT's new home, the renovated Hingham Civic Center's Sanborn Auditorium, 220 Central St. in Hingham.

Pre-sale tickets are $12 and may be purchased by calling Faye O'Brien at (781) 749-0857 or by visiting Corson's Glass House on Route 53 in Hingham or Olden's Pharmacy in South Weymouth. Group discounts available. All tickets sold at the door will be $14.

OBITUARIES

Russell R. Luker Jr.

Russell R. Luker Jr., 46, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, a landscape worker and amateur boxer, died suddenly April 17 at home.

Mr. Luker worked for various landscape companies in the area.

As an amateur boxer, he often boxed for charity and went by the nickname "West Corner Kid."

He enjoyed going to the beach.

He was born in Weymouth and graduated from Cohasset High School.

He leaves a daughter, Kimberly D. Luker of East Bridgewater; his mother, Angeline M. (Polito) Luker of Cohasset, and many aunts, uncles and cousins.

He was the son of the late Russell R. Luker Sr.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Ann's Church in Hull.

Interment was private.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home handled the arrangements.

Meeting the challenge of Cohasset sewers

The road that followed for Guild and his fellow commissioners was anything but smooth. In the late 80s, the state approved a plan to send all of Cohasset's wastewater via a pipeline to Hull only to pull the plug when it ran out of money.

In 1994, the state called Cohasset back in again to negotiate an "amended agreement for judgment" - a binding court order - to develop a plan to solve the town's wastewater problems.

"That went smoothly until the second amended agreement for judgment," Guild recalled. That agreement got specific on priority on-site districts - in other words — what the town would do to solve problem areas with failing septic systems.

"That's when it really got wild," Guild said about a citizen uprising against the plan.

With most of the hard work now behind him, Guild decided not to run for reelection this spring.

"I've been pronounced DOA (dead on arrival) on a number of occasions," Guild said about his 5-1/3 terms. "But I've always survived." He was challenged for reelection three times.

Guild says he won't miss running the plant, handling the contracts and responding to complaints.

"It's a never ending, heavy responsibility," he said.

Guild, who is married with four children and seven grandchildren, "officially" retired in 1987 from Ionics, Inc. in Watertown where he was vice president of the company that manufactured water desalination equipment. He continued to serve as a consultant for four years, but then gave it up because it took too much time from Cohasset's sewer projects.

"We've handed the citizens something that is still a lovely New England town while at the same time protecting the environment."

— Ted Guild, long-time sewer commissioner

Ideally suited for the sewer commission, Guild brought years of experience in conducting feasibility studies on water treatment systems to the table.

Over the years, Guild spent as much as 60-70 hours a week working on the sewer plans. He even spent one Christmas at the sewer plant when there was a personnel problem.

Now that he's really retired, Guild has promised to help the sewer commission as a volunteer consultant and will also take time to pursue his many interests. Those include playing tennis, collecting maritime paintings and being treasurer of the Society of Cincinnati, whose members are descended from officers who served in the American Revolution.

"There's so much out there," Guild said.

And for the time being he's going to relish being just like the Maytag repair man.

"I don't want to hear any complaints from anyone," he said.

Nevertheless, Guild feels good about what the sewer commission has accomplished.

"We've handed the citizens something that is still a lovely New England town while at the same time protecting the environment," he said.

Sewer Commissioner Henry Rattenbury said Guild was an often-unappreciated asset to the town.

"Most people have no idea how much time Ted put in," Rattenbury said. "Ted handled so much over the years."

Rattenbury said, largely due to Guild's efforts, the town will use a state-of-the-art "membrane" system at the sewer treatment plant that will make wastewater clean enough to be pumped into Cohasset Harbor without an out fall.

Rattenbury said the sewer commission will continue to use Guild as a resource.

"We are pleased he's agreed to stay involved," he said. "All the knowledge Ted's gotten over the years will be very valuable to us."

Meeting the challenge of Cohasset sewers

Long-time commissioner leaves on a high note

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Despite all the controversy, Ted Guild has no regrets. The 77-year-old Jerusalem Road resident is satisfied that his 16 years on the sewer commission — many of those as chairman - were well spent.

The North Cohasset sewer project is well underway and the notice of award has been given new Central Cohasset sewer district and expansion of the Elm Street plant capacity. Next is adding the homes around Lily Pond to the Central district that will help protect the town's water supply, as approved at the recent town meeting.

"We're here!" Guild said with the energy of someone half his age. "We're over the problems with the state and we're over the problems with the town, too."

In the months ahead, nearly 1,000 homes in town will be connected to the sewer - relieving those homeowners of the onerous Title 5 regulations forever.

But what many may not know is that to get to this point, the town and sewer commission spent 20 years in a legal wrangle with the state and countless hours explaining sewer projects to a sometimes hostile citizenry.

For Guild, who moved to Cohasset in 1974, his tenure on the sewer commission started in 1983.

At that time, Guild had already spent four years following the town's sewer woes with the state which included threats of thousands of dollars in fines for not signing on to a proposed massive sewer project. Plans then included a sewer treatment plant where the Barnes Little League Field is located and an ocean out-fall pipe less than a mile from Sandy Beach.

But in 1980 with runaway inflation and soaring short-term interest rates, the federal government stopped funding all public works projects - a move that may have played a role in protecting the town from over development.

Two years later, however, the money and the town's legal problems were back.

"Lucky Cohasset got the money," Guild said sarcastically. "And we were going ahead with a plan that would ultimately sewer 3/4 of the town."

The 1982 special town meeting put a hold on the plan until an engineering firm could determine alternatives. The move made two of the sitting sewer commissioners so angry they resigned.

It was the following spring that Guild, who laughs that then he was not then a member of the establishment but one of the "insurgents", won a seat on the board. Growing up in nearby Hingham, Guild had a keen sense of preservation. He worried what over-development could do to the town's character.

"There was a danger that we would keep sewering and sewering," Guild said. "And developers are right behind a new sewer line."

Advisors grapple with deficit

Smaller yearly tax hikes floated

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The advisory committee thinks that perhaps the way to avoid hefty overrides in the future is to go for a smaller tax hike every year.

Part of the reason behind the proposed FY'2000 sizable budget deficit, is that the town used free cash to balance the budget since the last operating budget override about four years ago, advisors say. Free cash, which is certified by the state, is unexpended appropriations.

And now it's time to catch up.

Under Prop. 2-1/2, a state law that dates back to 1980, the town cannot raise its tax levy by more than 2-1/2 percent a year without a successful ballot vote to override that limit.

Advisors think that asking the voters for less money every year might be more palatable than one large override every few years. The board concedes the town cannot live within 2-1/2,

Wrestling with upkeep is a dilemma

State rules make school maintenance mandatory

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

School building maintenance has been on the minds of many people in town lately. The school department is charged with the responsibility of providing a public education for Cohasset's students, but learning takes place in a classroom which is part of a building that must be maintained. Critics of the school department say it has failed to provide adequate building maintenance in the past.

Now the school committee has received $250,000 from town meeting for a study of ways to upgrade the Deer Hill and middle-high schools. The study is expected to clear the way for the school committee to seek a $7 million debt-exclusion override in the fall for the two school buildings. If approved, the $7 million

Norman Rockwell would have been inspired by Saturday's slice of tradition. Ken Burns could have made the event part of his critically acclaimed history of baseball documentary.

The Harold F. Barnes field, site of Cohasset Youth Baseball's opening day ceremonies, could have been plucked from its greeting-card location on North Main St., and set on the edge of a cornfield in Iowa or in the urban jungle of New York City.

It would have scarcely made a difference.

Opening day is pure Americana, no matter where it's held.

"This is really like Christmas to me," said league President and Treasurer Dan Leahy.

Nine-year-old Patrick Doonan and his six-year-old brother Brendan were anticipating an exciting and promising season.

Patrick, a catcher for the Indians, has already played two games this season. The Indians are 1-1 so far, but Patrick expects the team to improve.

"We're okay," said Patrick, who, like his brother also plays soccer, hockey and swims. "We'll probably get better as the season goes on. I haven't struck out, and I have a few hits!

Brendan was penciled in as the starting shortstop in his first game on Saturday. Both

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or election day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting Monday, May 17, is Friday, May 7, and the last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election Saturday, May 22, was Saturday, May 1. On May 7, the Clerk's office will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before the respective cut off dates.

Beach, dump stickers expiring

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. Stickers will be on sale at the town hall starting Monday, May 17, and will have the following schedule. Monday and Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Thursday evening, 5 to 7 p.m.; and Friday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday to Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $80 per family, for senior citizens over 65 will now be $65, and for a single resident $40.

You will need vehicle registrations, or if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2000.

Absentee ballots available for special election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election Saturday, May 22, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, May 21.

You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by May 22 to be counted.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

AREA RUGS

An area rug provides more than floor level comfort. It can add pattern, texture, and a color scheme to a room. It can also define an area, direct traffic, and/or lend a focal point to an interior that has none. Multiple area rugs can relate separate areas in a room to one another, or one area rug can pull a room together and anchor a conversation area. Much of what an area rug does is based on its pattern. For instance, a border rug tends to define an area, while a rug with a design makes a room appear larger. An area rug 6 x 9 feet fits nicely in front of a sofa to define a furniture grouping, while a larger area rug visually anchors the entire room.

At the end of a long day, it can be comforting to retreat to a home that is secure and beautiful. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can improve the look and feel of any environment. From area rugs, furniture and accessory coordination and placement, to the selection of window treatments, you can be assured of sound guidance. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

Just an (extra)ordinary 17-year-old girl

Kara Johanson confers with her friend Caitlin Quigley and her aid Kristi Conley in math class at Cohasset High School.

SPED continues to be debated

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Kara Johanson is not your typical teen. Sure, like her fellow students, she sweats out exams, laughs at her classmates' jokes, and enjoys an evening of pizza and videos with friends. But the 17-year-old Cohasset High School junior also participates in several extra-curricular activities, including skiing, managing the girls' basketball team and devoting time to peer counseling.

No slouch academically either, the ebullient honor roll student has just finished studying hard for her SATs, which she took last weekend. She hopes to attend Tufts University, although she wouldn't mind Harvard, and is considering law or medicine. However, she jokes, "I don't think I'll become a brain surgeon."

Kara is making wry reference to the fact that she has cerebral palsy and therefore doesn't enjoy the same manual dexterity as others. Her condition creates some special challenges. For instance, because she doesn't have control over her arm movements, she studied for her SATs with a computer program that she operates with a head mouse. The mouse is centered on a band she wears around her head which, when pointed toward the screen and held for a moment, clicks on whatever function she wants.

"We were very excited for Kara when she got this device," said Florence Ely, a special education teacher at Cohasset Middle-High School. Not only does it allow her to study on her own, but also, Ely explained, "it meant that she could say whatever she wanted for the first time without going through a human interpreter." Because Kara is not able to form words with her mouth, she must normally use her expressive eyes to point out letters on a Lucite board to her aide, Kristi Conley, and thereby create sentences that Conley speaks for her. But with the head mouse, she can use a computer to communicate independently.

"The first thing she did [when she got the mouse] was write poems for her friends as a Christmas gift," Ely said. "Typical Kara."

Obviously, Kara speaks very well for the public school education that has put her on the road to college and a productive life. But hers is only one success story. Cohasset has thus far taken pains to mainstream all of its special education students.

Now, however, the state legislation that has mandated her special education, or SPED, is being hotly debated. On one side are people who have seen firsthand the benefits of mainstreaming students with disabilities, And they have numbers to back them up.

Consider that as a result of legislation enacted in 1975 to protect the rights of people with disabilities, there has been a tripling of college freshmen who have benefited. In 1978, only three percent of incoming students on college campuses had disabilities. Today, the number of college freshmen with disabilities who are getting the opportunity to reach their full academic potential hovers near 10 percent. Moreover, 57 percent of youths with disabilities are now competitively employed within five years of leaving school, compared with only 33 percent of those with disabilities who received their education prior to the 1975 federal legislation.

Impressive numbers notwithstanding, on the other side of the debate are overburdened taxpayers, who must shoulder the burnt of the economic burden for accommodating students like Kara. SPED is paid for largely by homeowners through real estate taxes rather than financed by state or federal aid.

A dialogue over SPED costs is sweeping towns all over the country, but it has come home to roost in Cohasset in a major way, as real estate taxes in the town are constantly escalating.

The debate has not always taken a cordial tone. "Some people have actually pushed for an exclusion model, asking if psychological profiles have been done to find out how so-called normal students feel about sharing their classrooms with special education students," said Fred Johanson, Kara's father.

But "the current argument in the community about special education is about funding and nothing more," he said.

"The current argument in the community about special education is about funding and nothing more."
— Fred Johanson, Kara's father

He chalks up the negativity to the Commonwealth's not doing its part to ante up funding for special education needs — needs that schools are required to provide for students ages 3 to 21, no matter where the money comes from. As Tim Sindelar, senior staff attorney for the Disability Law Center Inc., in Boston, explained, SPED is not an option that towns can pass on.

"Essentially, special education is a right, not a choice," he said. "What is clear is that the Massachusetts statute on special education, which differs somewhat from the federal law on the issue, is based on constitutional principles — children with disabilities have the same right to be educated as their non-disabled peers and with the same effectiveness....If that means more money for the programs, then that's just one of the consequences of meeting an obligation that exists as a matter of fundamental special education."

Sindelar compares the issue to a medical one: it may cost more for a child with medical concerns, but we don't deny care. Likewise, he comments, we're required as a society not to withhold education.

State aid may be on way

Sindelar says that most states currently cover 50 percent or more of special education costs but that Massachusetts covers only about 20 percent, which is why the bill for town taxpayers is so high.

To change that, the state legislature is currently considering several bills that would ease taxpayers' burden. For example, Sen. Warren Tolman (D-Watertown) introduced a bill that, if enacted, would provide $60 million for the Commonwealth's school systems. Gov. Paul Cellucci supports an idea of Rep. Harold Lane (D-Holden), which involves providing only about $18 million but would give some immediate relief nonetheless.

Only Sen. Tolman's bill would bring the state up to the national average in terms of sharing costs with communities for SPED expenses, but it's currently something of a moot point—both bills are idling in the state legislature due to disagreements over wording. Rep. Lane's bill calls for a "free and appropriate" education while Sen. Tolman's uses the phrase "maximum feasible benefit."

Those opposed to Rep. Lane's bill argue that "free and appropriate" leaves the door open for individual schools and their administrators to decide what is "appropriate" for special needs students. Their concern stems from cases like Rowley vs. Henry Hudson High School, a U.S. Supreme Court case in the mid 1980s, where it was found that an "appropriate" education for a girl who was deaf and needed an interpreter could be limited to lip-reading, which enabled the child to pick up only 60 percent of what teachers said. The student's intelligence testing scores showed that she could do better than the Cs that she was earning while relying on lip-reading, but the court ruled that she was passing and therefore receiving an "appropriate" education.

Kara's father is particularly rankled by "free and appropriate." "Would she have received the same opportunity under the banner of "free and appropriate," he wondered aloud.

On the flip side of the argument, Sindelar recognizes that people might read the language "maximum feasible benefit" as a red flag that students with disabilities will get a lot of breaks. However, he points out, it is a struggle for special needs students to receive the bare minimum they need to work at the same level of efficiency as their peers. "People have to consider the reality of the situation and not the rhetoric. What is actually being given to these students?" he asked.

"This is a civil rights issue," he noted. "We as a society have recognized that disability is not a disqualifying event....As a pluralistic society, we welcome differences and have to make sure they don't make differences in terms of achievement and success.

"What people need to do," he continued, "is not fight among themselves but become informed and involved in current legislation and write to legislators to get state money to begin covering these costs."

To that end, selectman Thomas Callahan has

SPED, PAGE 4

drafted a form letter for statewide distribution that sidesteps the "appropriate" versus "maximum potential" debate and instead focuses on getting state funding. He has offered to provide two versions of the letter to cities and towns across the Commonwealth which would be sent to the legislature possibly as early as this summer. The municipal version is to be signed by selectmen, school committees, school superintendents and town administrators in towns across the state. The other, a citizen version, is to be signed by ordinary people, Callahan said. He hopes groups like the PSO will help distribute the letters and get signatures.

"We're asking the legislature to put wording aside and pay attention to the funding," Callahan said. Whether the state provides $18 million or $60 million, he commented, both are "better than nothing."

Cohasset Middle-High School principal Curtis Collins applauds the initiative.

Most people he has run into don't think it would be right to deny a child of special services, he said. They "realize that this is a funding problem and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has to get off its local duff and do something about funding out towns."

With the source of future funding uncertain as it is, Kara is moving forward.

"What people need to do, is not fight among themselves but become informed and involved in current legislation and write to legislators to get state money to begin covering these costs."

—Tim Sindelar of the Disability Law Center Inc.

Last winter, doctors at Children's Hospital gave her Baclofen, a medication that blocks signals sent from the spinal cord that causes muscles to contract. The drugs worked well for her, and her clenched hands have loosened up as a result. She is hoping that the next step will be speech class, where she will learn to use the muscles in her mouth and throat to work the way she wants them to in order to be able to speak directly to people.

Not being able to speak at all has made it all too easy for people to fail to recognize the person beneath the disability. "I don't like when people talk around me like I'm invisible," Kara said from her wheelchair by pointing with her eyes to the letters on the Lucite board. "I want to say to them, 'Hello! I am right here, and I'm not stupid! My brain works!' But you can't help people's ignorance."

Postal workers collect for food pantry

Cohasset Post Office workers will again be working for the Cohasset Food Pantry Saturday, May 8, when residents are asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be packed up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the pantry.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers," Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operation, said. "It helps stock our shelves for the summer and makes sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable supplementary supplies. We hope townspeople will respond generously to this effort."

Last year the postal workers collected more than 4,000 pounds of foods and staples. This year's drive has been organized again by Richard Leach with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Francine Winters.

"It helps stock our shelves for the summer and makes sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable supplementary supplies. We hope townspeople will respond generously to this effort."

— Marjorie Steele, head of the food pantry

A "wish list" drawn up by Steele and her associate Bob Thompson, to guide residents in their donations, includes seasonal needs such as ketchup, mayonnaise, cold cereal and fruit juices (bottled or in paper cartons), as well as laundry and dishwashing detergents and paper products.

The carriers pick up the donations as they deliver the mail, then bring it to the Post Office where they are weighed. Other volunteers sort the items and help bring them to the pantry in the basement of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue beside the Town Hall, where they are shelved and stored.

The pantry is open from 9-11 a.m. Tuesdays. Any Cohasset resident who meets limited income guidelines or who has special needs is eligible to receive food at two-week intervals.

Public forum on budget

The Cohasset Board of Selectmen, town manager, school committee, and school superintendent will hold a public forum on Monday, May 10, at 7:30 p.m. at the high school auditorium to discuss the fiscal year 2000 town operating budget.

The purpose of this forum is to allow residents to ask questions concerning the upcoming May 17 special town meeting and May 22 special override election. The town manager and school superintendent will outline the various budget scenarios, along with a detailed explanation of what to expect at the special town meeting and special election.

Members of the board of selectmen and school committee will be present to answer questions as well.

All interested persons are urged to attend this forum.

when the bulk of the budget consists of salaries with annual negotiated increases of 3 percent plus steps.

"We're hoping to find some guideline," advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said. "But we may be willing to concede that 4 percent (rather than 2-1/2 percent) is needed to run the town."

At a special election May 22, voters will be given a menu of override options. They can vote for one, all or none of the choices. A special town meeting on May 24 can appropriate up to the highest amount of override approved.

Town officials are conducting a special forum at 7:30 p.m. Monday to explain the overrides and answer questions. (See related sidebar)

At the April 10 annual town election, voters defeated a $766,000 override by a 60 to 40 percent margin. The magnitude of the defeat discouraged selectmen from going back to the electorate with the same figure. After talks with the school committee and town manager, they agreed to a smorgasbord of overrides:

- $380,000 (tax rate would be $15.74 per $1,000 of assessed valuation);
- $509,000 (tax rate, $15.88);
- $612,000 (tax rate, $15.99).

If none of the overrides passes, the taxes on the so-called average Cohasset home, valued at $314,000, would increase $133 in fiscal year 2000, which begins July 1. A tax rate of $15.34 per $1,000 of assessed valuation is needed to cover the town's operating budget without an override.

The May 22 election is actually sandwiched between two special town meetings. The one on May 17 is supposed to discuss the budget and be continued to the May 24 session, two days after the election. The warrant explains that selectmen will make a motion on May 17 to continue discussion of the proposed budgets until the following Monday.

The advisory committee is still concerned that town meeting can be unpredictable and may not follow the game plan outlined by selectmen.

"What if voters go and say, 'we want such and such,'" Galt Grant asked.

Advisor Dan Evans couldn't understand why the first session couldn't pass four different budget scenarios —taking into account each override —eliminating the need for the second town meeting.

And Rick Flynn pointed out that the selectmen's motion to continue the meeting could be voted up or down.

"The whole thing is like Russian Roulette," he said.

The advisory committee also hopes voters will remember that they live in one town and not get into a budget war over schools and other services. Members pointed out that while some families have schoolchildren, others did have or will have, while still others may have grandchildren in the schools.

"Some could say, 'I only use the fire department once a year, so why should I pay for it?'" Flynn said. "It starts to be an a la carte around town for services."

State rules make school maintenance mandatory

project would qualify for a 61 percent reimbursement from the state. Some residents don't want to support the override without assurances from the school department that it will provide adequate building maintenance in the future.

The schools are in a financial bind because of the failed $766,000 general override that could force the school committee to slash $445,000 from its budget. Superintendent of Schools Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey has indicated that the school committee may have to slash its maintenance budget to find some of the $445,000 in cuts. This information comes close on the heels of plans by the state to impose tougher school maintenance spending requirements on cities and towns.

"Our cuts could go deep," Malvey said. "With the override not passing, we've had to reduce our maintenance budget. If we have to squeeze out that much money and our basic mission is teaching, then we have to focus our available funds on education. We have to keep the money in the classrooms as much as possible."

Malvey said the $445,000 cuts would drain significant funds from the maintenance, custodial and supply budgets. Unless voters approve an override in another Proposition 2-1/2 election scheduled for later this month, the school committee will have to begin making budget cuts.

School committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said cuts in the maintenance budget may be inevitable without an override.

"The problem is the school operating budget traditionally has been under-funded," DeGiacomo said. "In the past, when there was no money, the school committee used part of its maintenance line item. We have the ability to shift line items. I think it is a problem, and we're aware that maintenance is a real issue."

DeGiacomo said the school committee is discussing the problem with town officials.

"I feel confident that the town will play an important role or completely take over school maintenance," DeGiacomo said. "It probably makes a lot of sense. The school committee wants to concentrate on the education of children."

The state Department of Education provides funding for school education and building maintenance each year. Malvey said that state officials are requiring minimum maintenance requirements because the Legislature provides hundreds-of-millions of dollars per year for local schools. State officials want to make sure that the projects they fund are maintained properly in the future. Beginning next year, the state will fund new school building projects only if communities spend a pre-determined amount on maintenance.

In a memo, State Commissioner of Education David P. Driscoll has informed communities that the state will enforce minimum maintenance spending requirements beginning with the current fiscal year. The state allots money to local districts through Chapter 70 funding. In the memo, dated March 10, 1999, Driscoll says communities that do not meet the minimum spending requirements can request a waiver for opening a new school or closing an old one, completing a major renovation project, reducing utility costs, increasing the number of students sent out of district, or using municipal employees for maintenance.

Communities that do not qualify for a waiver in fiscal year 1999 will have until June 1, 2000 to develop a remediation plan or face cuts in state funding. Communities that do not spend the minimum amount will face cuts in State Building Assistance (SBA) funding. The cuts would come through SBA reimbursements for new building projects. The cuts would apply only to projects that qualify for their first SBA reimbursement after July 1, 2000. The state does not begin reimbursing projects until a few years after they are approved by towns. Projects completed in 1999 might not receive reimbursements until 2002.

If voters approve a $7 million override for the Deer Hill and middle-high school projects, and the schools do not meet the minimum maintenance requirements, the state could suspend SBA funding for the project. Funding would resume only if the town developed a remediation plan.

The memo also contains a schedule of state foundation budget allotments for all cities and towns in fiscal year 1999 and the minimum maintenance spending requirement for each community. According to the schedule, Cohasset's ordinary maintenance foundation budget allotment for fiscal year 1999 is $307,611. The allotment for extraordinary maintenance is $204,823. The minimum spending requirement for maintenance is the average of the two amounts, or $256,217.

Koed raises the most dough in election campaign

Candidates file preliminary finance reports

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If the amount of money raised is a gauge, then it's no wonder Fred Koed won a seat on the board of selectmen at the April 10 town election.

According to pre-election campaign finance reports filed at the town clerk's office, Koed raised $4,955 and spent $1,853.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who was reelected, raised $1,365.88 and spent $705.80, and former selectman Nan Roth, who lost her bid for reelection raised $1,425.43 and spent $633.15.

Under state campaign finance laws, candidates are required to file campaign finance reports regardless of whether or not money has been raised or expended, according to the town clerk's office.

Contributors who donated $50 or more must be listed on the report.

Koed's contributors included: Ron & Mary Goodwin, 166 Sohier St. ($350); Michael Hurley, 136 Border St. ($350); Joseph Rosano, 48 Howe Road ($350); Philip Johnston, 134 Tilden Road Marshfield ($300); John W. Sullivan, 708 Jerusalem Road ($200); Richard Murray, 700 Jerusalem Road ($150); and Peter & Donna Pratt, 75 Ripley Road ($150).

Contributing $100 each to Koed's campaign were: Edward Chase, 39 Nichols Road; Clark Chatterton, 9 Red Gate Lane; Sallyann Chatterton, 9 Red Gate Lane; Edward & Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road; Robert E. Kasameyer, 17 Pond St.; Thomas Keating, 249 Franklin St., Duxbury; Gerry Lipsett, 34 Pond St.; Edward & Priscilla Long, 15 Nichols Road; Paul & Nancy Pattison, 104 Elm St.; Glenn Pratt, 382 King St.; and the Committee to Elect Steven A. Tolman, 17 Madeline St., Brighton.

Under state campaign finance laws, candidates are required to file campaign finance reports regardless of whether or not money has been raised or expended.

Those who contributed $50 to Koed's campaign include: Michael & Anna Abbruzzese, 155 Border St.; Francis & Gail Collins, 404 S. Main St.; Daniel & Jean Cotton, 27 King St.; Chris & Karen Ford, 145 Border St.; Arne & Martha Gjesteby, 81 Old Pasture Road; John & Mary Hartshorne, 115 Border St.; Lee & Lee Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road; Fred Johansen, 20 King St.; David & Barbara Leahy, 60 Pond St.; Donna & James McGee, 27 Hill St.; David M. O'Brien, 7 Lloyd Road, Tewksbury; John & Margaret O'Donnell, 72 Old Pasture Road; James & Charlotte Reilly, 64 Windy Hill Road; Richard & Marsha Silvia, 445 Beechwood St.; Debra Smith, 110 Black Road Road; and Ann & R. G. Vanderweil, Jr., 500 Jerusalem Road.

McMorris's top contributors, who each gave $100, were: Mary Foley, 184 Lantern Lane; James & Donna French, 10 Jerusalem Road; Richard Lordan, 35 Clay Spring Road; Susan Kent, 3 Mendel Road; David McMorris, 89 Doane St.; Lynn & Arthur Morgenstern, 7 Linden Dr.; and Michael Thornton, 60 State St., 6th Floor, Boston.

Donating $100 to the Roth campaign were: Diarmuid & Elizabeth O'Connell, 25 Sohier St.; Gordon & Motoko Deane, 672 Jerusalem Road; and June Levin Roth, 44 Gramercy Park North, New York. Rustam DeVitre & Virginia Shahinian, 430 Atlantic Ave. and Matthew & Marjorie Steele, 9 Black Horse Lane, each contributed $75 to support Roth's reelection effort.

The PSO donated $500 to the pro-override group, the Committee for Quality Town Services, Joan E. Allen, treasurer, the sole donation on the report.

The anti-override organization, Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, L. C. Jenkins, treasurer, reported zero donations.

Updated finance reports should be available next week at the town clerks' office. Candidates and political action groups are required to file post-election campaign finance reports on or before the 30th day following the election and a year-end report on or before Jan. 20 of the following year.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, May 11.

AROUND TOWN

A 'HIGH FIVE!'

A standing ovation goes to Michael Savage this week, and does he ever deserve it! Michael ran in The Big Sur marathon (yes, the one in California), 26.2 miles! The race started at Big Sur and wound up in Carmel — there are tons of mountains within the route (many "heartbreak hills"). And he finished it! Paul Gavaza and his family were waiting for him at the finish line, they simply could not believe how great he looked as he crossed! In fact, he had some yogurt there, then went out with the gang for hamburgers!

As Mike Lynch of Channel 5 would say, he's this week's "High 5!"

ALPHA COURSE

Members of Beechwood, South Shore Baptist and St. Stephen's churches are sponsoring "The Alpha Course," a practical introduction to the Christian faith. The course is open to anyone who would enjoy complimentary dinner, a video and discussion. They will meet Wednesdays from April 28 to July 8 at 6 p.m. in St. Stevens. You can call St. Stevens for more information.

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER

Nancy Snowdale is in seventh heaven, she is a great-grandmother! Meghan Leigh Snowdale, born March 25, is the first Snowdale girl born in 70 years! Her parents are Brian and Sharon Snowdale of Weymouth. Meghan's big brother is Brian Jr. Meghan's grandfather was the late Wayne Snowdale, and her grandmother is Jane Snowdale of Scituate. Hearty congratulations to you all!

BEAUTIFUL TRIANGLE

Every one of us who goes by the garden triangle at the corner of Beechwood and King Street should take the time to thank Mary Ann Cushing for tending it! It looks beautiful because of her "tender, loving care," and people from within and outside of the town always notice and comment on it!

ON STAGE

Don't miss the Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "Anne of Green Gables" continuing this weekend at Cohasset Town Hall. Spring concert is May 8

The 22 women's voices of the Broad Cove Chorale will be led by director Margo Euler in a program of music by turn-of-the-century English composer Gustav Holst. The concert and following reception will be presented Saturday, May 8, at 8 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center (SSAC) in Cohasset as part of its Sundays at the Center series.

The Broad Cove Chorale has been performing a wide variety of challenging choral music throughout the South Shore for 24 years. The members of the chorale live and work all over the South Shore area and bring their gift of melody to many venues each season.

"Gustav Holst is generally acknowledged to be one of the great composers for women's voices," says Euler. "Our program selections range from melodic folk-songs and elegant part-songs, to clever canons and richly romantic extended elegies. We include the beautiful sacred verses of the Rig Veda, the oldest collection of poetry in the world. It is very exciting to be performing these wonderful works of art for voices in the superior acoustic setting of the SSAC's main gallery."

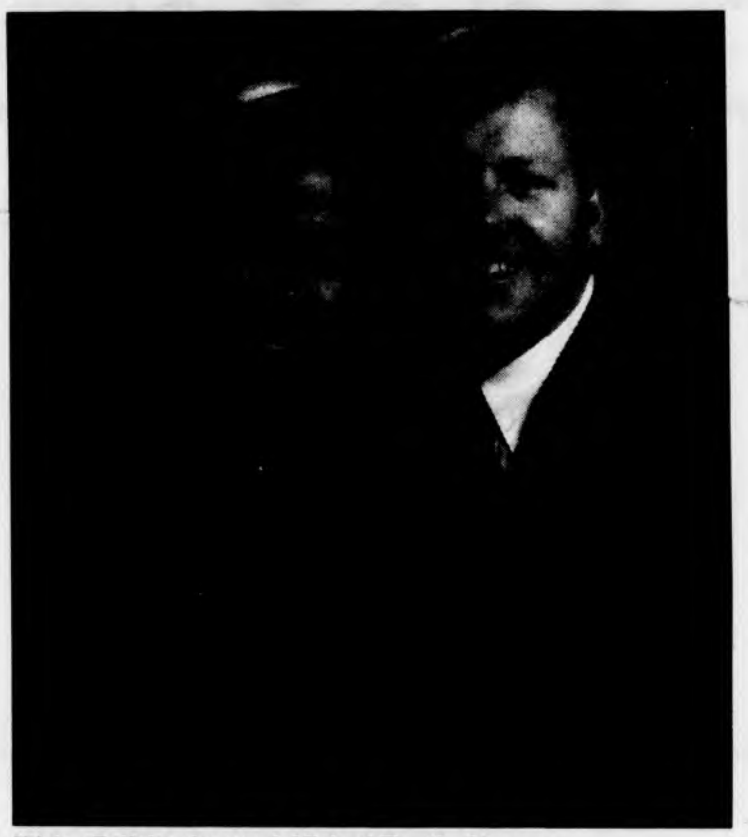
Anniversary waltz bridal tour

The Garden Club of Hingham, Inc., announces "Anniversary Waltz-A Bridal Tour" to celebrate the club's 75th anniversary. This combination garden and home interiors tour will be held throughout Hingham Thursday, June 3, from 11 a.m.-7 p.m., featuring seven weddings from 1920 to the millenium.

Tickets for the tour may be purchased at six South Shore locations: Round Hill Design, Hingham; Bookport, Hingham; Corson's Glass House, Hingham; Buttonwood Books, Cohasset; Fleming's, Cohasset; and The Studio, Duxbury. Advance tickets are $20 each. Advance tickets may also be purchased by calling (781) 749-4219. Tickets purchased the day of the tour are $22.

The tour of these seven Hingham properties features outdoor gardens and landscapes as well as floral arrangements in select interiors. Each location has as its theme a popular song of the decade, and the committees have been studying period floral arranging and wedding customs.

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS



Kristyn Beth Lemieux and Michael Timothy Stevens

Lemieux/Stevens engagement

On becoming a mother

Over the last 30 years I have been many things — a student, an employee, a reporter and a newspaper editor. More personally, I have been a daughter, a sister, and a wife. To this resume I recently added the role of mother.

I'm not sure how good I am at it just yet.

Nine months, indeed 29 years and 11 months wasn't enough time to train me for motherhood. Mothers and mothers-in-law offer unsolicited advice. Friends with children share the wisdom of their experience.

But none of their insights were preparation enough for the often overwhelming responsibility, and the indescribable joy of being a mother.

And for me it has only just begun.

"Now you're a member of the club," noted my co-worker, whose eldest son is about to graduate from West Point. Membership lasts two lifetimes, I'm told — yours and your child's.

I've only been on the job for 10 weeks, but already I am beginning to understand the phrase unconditional love. I can now see clearly how it is that from the moment your child arrives, he becomes the most important thing in your life. How you worry constantly in his first weeks of life about how much he sleeps or doesn't, how much he eats or spits up and how much he cries. How it is that days can slip into evening with you still in your pajamas, and the coffee you made and intended to drink 12 hours ago, ice cold in the pot. How dinner conversations — when your able to have them —shift from office politics to pacifiers and trips to the pediatrician. How going out for dinner has become a rarity and watching a movie outside of your living room, an impossibility.

And how it is that all of these changes are perfectly fine with you.

As I approach my first mother's day, still bleary-eyed from late night feedings, and completely in awe of this little human being my husband and I have brought into this world, I'm filled with an abundance of love, hope and anticipation. Each day brings new developments and changes — new reasons to revel in motherhood.

Toothless, dimpled smiles and squeals of delight now make up for those first weeks of nerve-rattling crying, and I find myself waiting in wonder for his next accomplishment.

Before he is fully grown many more career opportunities may fill the pages of my resume, but I know now that this is the most important job I'll ever hold.

Reflections on the marina process

TO THE EDITOR:

It was to be a watershed event. A long-awaited multi-board meeting designed to discuss the significant issues and implications surrounding the Cohasset Harbor Marina expansion. But anticipation was met with an unexpected result at last week's gathering: the majority of town leaders sat stone-faced and silent.

In many ways though, this seems a fitting culmination to a remarkable legacy of indecision and ineffectiveness. During countless earlier meetings by individual boards, officials have been lost in broad and confusing interpretations of town code and a desire whenever possible to defer to yet another board, tripping over one another in an apparent contest to see who could go the longest without actually making a decision.

They are mired in the minutiae, haggling over rules and regulations rather than speaking to the ultimate and critical issue at hand: the continuing commercialization of our tranquil harbor and the environmental, safety, and aesthetic implications for the future. It is quite troubling that no one in an official capacity has been willing to address the larger issue, to take a stand and respond to the significant concerns of an ever-growing number of vocal Cohasset citizens.

For all of the decisions members of each board make on other issues during their terms, such decisions will ultimately pale in comparison and in memory when, years from now, we look at what has happened to our pristine harbor. This will be their enduring and sad legacy to the community.

But it is not yet too late.

Our town leaders must resolve to act forcefully and decisively to protect the harbor and earn the trust our community has placed in them.

I have two words for our esteemed town boards: Harbor Plan. Before it's too late. Before development spirals out of control and Cohasset Harbor is lost to commercialism. Initiate a moratorium on all development until a full scale harbor plan is funded, commissioned, and completed.

Only then will we have sound, methodical, and consistent decisioning regarding our most cherished town asset.

School statistics clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to Will Smith's letter which appeared in last week's Mariner. While the statistics Mr. Smith cites are correct, I think some discussion is required concerning the few statistics Mr. Smith chose to spotlight out of the hundreds of statistics available from the Department of Education and other sources.

The first group of statistics chosen by Mr. Smith compares several of our spending categories with the average of all school districts in the Commonwealth. These school districts include the Lawrence School District which is currently in receivership, as well as other urban and rural districts that either cannot or will not pay the price for quality public education. The question of course is: are these the districts to which we want to be compared? The fact that we spend more on our schools than the average of all other districts does not indicate that we are overspending. It merely points out the fact that Cohasset has always recognized the value of an excellent school system and has been willing to pay for it. Mr. Smith also compares our per pupil spending level with the average of all districts in the Commonwealth. Per pupil spending is calculated by the state based on the amount of money a district reports it is spending, directly or indirectly, on its schools. Unfortunately, Mr. Smith does not explain that there are no guidelines given to towns concerning what expenditures should be considered school expenditures as opposed to town expenditures. He also does not explain that Cohasset reports areas of spending that simply are not reported by other towns. It is for this reason that most professionals feel that it is impossible to use this number to compare one district to another.

The next set of statistics Mr. Smith chose to cite compares Cohasset's spending levels with the minimum expenditures required by the Commonwealth as foundation spending. Mr. Smith's comment that the state's educational foundation minimum expenditures are merely "suggested" is incorrect. They are mandated rock bottom levels which, if not met, could mean the termination of the Chapter 70 funding we receive from the state which in FY2000 will equal $1,076,634. Again, the fact that we spend significantly more than the level at which state funding may be terminated certainly does not indicate overspending by the schools.

Rather than pick and choose my own set of statistics to indicate that our school spending is not out of whack with other districts that maintain excellent school systems, let me merely suggest that if your readers want a full picture of how our spending matches up with comparable school districts they can contact the Department of Education or the superintendent's office. Trash billed by-the-bag in area towns

RECYCLING COMMENTARY

The town dump is joining the drive-in movie as a relic of a bygone era. As the quantity of materials we throw out has increased steadily, the number of landfills in which to put them continues to decline sharply. Municipal landfills in Cohasset, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Milton, Needham, Pembroke, Plymouth, Scituate, Taunton, Weymouth and across the state have been or will soon close, many because they threaten to leech contaminants into the groundwater. This leaves municipalities with fewer and more expensive options for disposal. Several of the 14 municipal members of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative are facing this challenge.

More trash going to fewer landfills has spurred several local cities and towns to start charging residents by the bag to cover spiraling disposal costs. This system, often referred to as "Pay-as-You-Throw" (PAYT), helps towns and taxpayers in two ways. First and most obvious, it helps to fund the disposal cost, which is running about $65/ton plus transportation at combustion facilities like SEMASS in Rochester and the Millbury waste-to-energy plant. New regulations calling for reduced mercury emissions are expected to drive the price as high as $80/ton in the near term to pay for the equipment needed to comply. Some towns, such as Pembroke, are paying more than $100/ton for collection, transportation and disposal.

The second benefit of a PAYT program is that, since residents must pay for what trash they generate, they tend to generate less. Very few households will put out more than a barrel full of trash if they have to pay for the service. Towns such as Milton, Needham and Taunton that have instituted PAYT programs have seen reductions in their volume of trash in the range of 20-40 percent. Recyling, which is usually provided at no charge in this type of program, generally increases by a huge margin. The city of Taunton, which closed its landfill and started a curbside PAYT program in 1996, experienced a 23 percent reduction in solid waste disposed, a 63 percent increase in recycling, and had an overall decrease in solid waste of 12 percent. Needham sends about 30 percent less trash to Millbury from its transfer station than it disposed before PAYT, saving the taxpayers an estimated $350,000/year in disposal costs. The town recycles and composts 58 percent of its solid waste since its program began last summer at a cost far less than that of disposal. Considering that the average citizen tosses about a half ton of trash per year, the savings in money and resources can be significant for any town. And the widow who generates a half barrel of trash a week and recycles what she can, doesn't have to subsidize the family of six that sets out several barrels and uses their recycling bin as a toy chest.

Towns such as Milton, Needham and Taunton that have instituted PAYT programs have seen reductions in their volume of trash in the range of 20-40 percent.

PAYT programs can vary as much as the towns that run them. Some towns, such as Halifax, choose to use pre-printed bags, while others such as Milton use stickers affixed to the barrels. Some communities such as East Bridgewater continue to fund the fixed costs of disposal through taxes and only charge for quantities greater than a barrel a week. Others such as Milton take the whole enterprise out of the tax base and fund disposal entirely through bag or sticker sales. Many towns like Lakeville charge a base fee to every household and charge a small fee for the bags or tags. Cities and towns usually set the price of a bag or sticker between 50 cents and $2. There are many possibilities, and it is up to each town to decide what system will work best for them. With more than 90 towns and cities in Massachusetts and more than 4,000 nationwide that treat trash as a utility, there are many models from which to learn.

Several South Shore communities with imminent landfill closures or expiring disposal contracts are considering such programs. The South Shore Recycling Cooperative encourages its member communities to consider PAYT as a practical and fair means of reducing trash generation and associated costs. The DEP also provides financial and technical assistance to towns and cities interested in starting such programs.

With Pay-as-You-Throw, residents pay only for the disposal services they use. And after the initial furor that sometimes ensues dies down, most folks think that it's the best way to throw.

The trouble with kids

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, I was certain that no one would ever hear me say this, but in my day . . .

Just whispering in class could get you a rap on the knuckles from the teacher. Anything more serious got you a note to take home to the folks and a "tough love" slapping around, both physically and orally.

Whatever it was, it was my fault and my fault alone. The devil didn't make me do it, to paraphrase Flip Wilson. As a result, I was only kicked out of school once, a pretty good record in those days.

I read with amazement some of the things that have been going on among our school kids in the past few weeks.

There was that thing in Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., where two teen-agers, who badly needed a rap on the knuckles, shot 13 classmates to death and then killed themselves.

One might say with a certain degree of confidence that the two killers, with their arsenal of guns and bombs, were responsible for the carnage, that they were simply bad kids, But, no . . .

"As young people project themselves in virtual reality, movies and arcades and get their heads into that, life becomes virtual reality, which is not reality," pontificates Dr. Bernard Yudowitz, a psychiatrist.

"The tragedy could have been prevented by reducing access to guns by kids," says John Rosenthal, co-founder of Stop Handgun Violence. "We can blame TV, the media and any number of violent movies, but access to guns is the real issue."

It's those twin devils, guns and the movies, that made them do it.

At the same time, the families of three students gunned down by a 14-year-old classmate in Paducah, Ky., two years ago are suing for $130 million the makers of the movies and video games they claim made him do it.

"We intend to hurt Hollywood," said their lawyer, Jack Thompson." We intend to hurt the video game industry. We intend to hurt (Internet) sex-porn sites." The shooter, Michael Corneal, got 25 years for the triple murder.

Closer to home, in Marblehead, police who raided a teenaged drinking party were sued by the host's mother for breaking into the home without a warrant and confiscating the booze and a quantity of marijuana.

"They needed to stop it before someone got hurt or died," said Leonard Kesten, attorney for the police.

More than 200,000 students were given the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test to find out how much they have learned in school last week, but 50 kids at Danvers refused to take it.

"I don't think education is something that should be standardized," said Melissa Parziale, 16. "It just seems wrong to me and oppressive, and I feel morally it's something I should stand up against."

Everyone in Lincoln. R. I. seemed satisfied with their annual "Ladies' Choice" and "Gentlemen's Choice" events in which girls are encouraged to take "a special gentleman" (their fathers) to a Story Book Ball and boys are urged to take "your favorite lady" (their mothers) to a baseball game.

This, said the Rhode Island chapter of the ACLU, smacks of sexism perpetuates gender stereotypes, causing emotional harm to children and must be stopped immediately.

"Not all girls want to be Cinderella," said ACLU Director Steven Brown. "Not all boys want to be baseball players."

Maybe it would be better if they did.

Opposed to smoking variance

TO: THE COHASSET BOARD OF HEALTH

The Drug & Alcohol Committee of the Town of Cohasset made the following motion at its meeting of April 14:

"The Drug & Alcohol Committee strongly protests the recent decision of the Board of Health to allow a smoking variance in the Atlantica restaurant contrary to the unanimous vote at Town Meeting to outlaw smoking in all public restaurants in the Town of Cohasset."

Massachusetts is one of four states that has started to run advertisements graphically portraying smoking's adverse health effects. This is in addition to the $100 million that companies such as Phillip Morris have spent in educating today's youth as to the hazards of smoking. Despite such large amounts of advertising, young people learn behavior by example. Young people observing adults smoking come away with the message that "it must be okay." Sadly, lung cancer has surpassed heart disease, stroke and other forms of cancer — breast cancer, colon cancer and prostrate cancer — as the leading cause of death in older adults. Lawsuits filed on behalf of the citizens of Massachusetts have successfully sued for reimbursement for money spent on the treatment of lung cancer victims — those who spent years smoking as well as those who were exposed to second hand smoke through their occupations.

Closer to home, 48 percent of Cohasset Middle/High School students will have smoked cigarettes before the age of 15 — 30 percent of those smoked before age 13. Thirty-six.3 percent report regular cigarette smoking. (Cohasset Youth Survey, Fall 1998).

To allow smoking in a public restaurant encourages unhealthy behavior among all people, especially young people to whom we owe a great responsibility. In addition, it exposes restaurant workers to life-threatening health issues, which have been proven unconditionally, as well as successfully litigated in courts across the country. We believe your decision to allow smoking at Atlantica is not in the best interest of the people of Cohasset whose health issues your duty is to protect. We respectfully request your reconsideration.

The Rev. Clifford Cutler for the Drug & Alcohol Committee

Support for override urged

TO THE EDITOR:

It's easy to say "NO;" just ask any 2-year-old. "Do you want an ice cream cone?" NO!

Sometimes the decisions we adults make are just as arbitrary and misinformed. "No, I don't want air conditioning at the new Osgood School, so I voted NO on the override." Too late! If you wanted to register your no vote on that issue, you needed to be at Town Meeting.

"No, I don't want to pay for a new driveway at Deer Hill!" Too late again! Town Meeting voted yes, and apparently you weren't there to register your opinion.

"No, I don't want a firefighter available if a grease fire in my kitchen gets out of control." That's what your No vote on the override means.

"No, I don't want the students of this town to have the text books available to continue a math program that has been in the works for years and considered one of the best in the country." That's what your No vote on the override also means.

Before you vote NO again, please consider what you're voting against. The budget for the town is a tremendously complex issue and covers virtually every service you've come to expect and rely on as a resident of Cohasset.

Perhaps the message you want to get across is, "YES, I want to preserve the services I've come to expect from this town. That's why I live here. But, YES, I expect my elected officials to work together to provide these services in the most economical manner. YES, I expect the budget numbers they develop to have integrity, not fat. YES, I want to trust in the system of government that we've chosen for this town."

It's really time to say NO to the anti-tax bullies who have misled voters into a situation that is financially devastating to the way of life Cohasset residents have enjoyed in the past and want to see preserved.

At the next override vote May 22, say YES; then, get involved to insure that the town meets its obligations to its residents.

Vote yes, yes, yes

TO THE EDITOR:

As I see it, the town of Cohasset has only two choices when it comes to voting in our upcoming election on May 22.

Choice one—to take our information from people who never attend school committee meetings, never take up the invitation from school administrators to visit classrooms or see operations, who fire off information provided by interruptus former school committee members while hiding behind trash journalism provided by sarcastic little mice who live in a fantasy world of cults, demons (school moms) and high priests and priestesses (our school committee).

Or choice two—to believe the elected members of our school committee who have educated themselves through countless hours to the issues of public education, worked on the school budget and teacher's contract for more than six months, who labor in the best interest of the town without a taxpayer's stipend and who are willing to address any critic, number or concern with research, data and full attention.

So in reality, it comes down to this. Take a gamble and believe in your fantasy world mice and painfully find out the truth next September when our school system rating begins to slip along with our property values and our children enter classes of high enrollment with next-to-nothing supplies and no extra-curricular activities. Or, vote yes, yes, yes on 1a, 1b, and 1c and maintain our property values and a quality school system that truly provides what is necessary for our children.

DRUG DANGERS
The chiropractic approach to health does not involve the use of drugs. The value of this drugless philosophy is reflected in the fact that adverse drug events (including medication errors and interactions) are the sixth leading cause of death in America, responsible for at least 100,000 deaths annually. These statistics come from a 1998 report in the Journal of the American Medical Association and it is easy to see how they came to be. Approximately 2½ billion prescriptions are filled in U.S. pharmacies each year and about half of the people who are prescribed two or more drugs (common among the elderly) receive medications that have been reported to interact adversely. Clearly, chiropractic is a safer and more natural alternative.
Understanding, compassion and the traditional American "Family Doctor" approach can be expected when care is obtained from a doctor of chiropractic. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are currently accepting new patients and welcome you to call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Let us help you live a healthier and happier life, free of pain and discomfort. Our goal is to provide you with quality chiropractic healthcare to help you continue your care beyond the mere relief of obvious symptoms, for your long-term health interests for the rest of your life, without the use of drugs. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where our "Mother's Morning Out" program can help you achieve this goal.
P.S. Aside from being a drugless treatment, chiropractic treats underlying causes to alleviate symptoms.

Marina expansion is not planning board's turf

But issue could resurface again

By Brian Brennan
CORRESPONDENT

It was billed as a powwow so that the various town boards could get on the same page, so to speak, regarding the controversial expansion of Cohasset Harbor Marina.

But as it stands now, the planning board — which called the April 28 meeting — has no jurisdiction over the project which will about double the number of slips in Bailey's Creek.

Chairman Alfred Moore said that the goal of the meeting was to "explain who has the responsibility for permits and to decide what town boards come into play."

As of last week, the planning board, as it turned out, was not one of those boards.

Building Inspector Bob Egan, who also serves as the town's zoning enforcement officer, declared that there are no zoning regulations for the planning board to discuss in the case of the marina expansion because, according to the Cohasset's zoning map, the residential area in question does not extend into the water.

"The expansion of the marina occurs in water that is beyond the zoned area," Moore explained. "On the advice of town counsel, we determined that the planning board has no jurisdiction."

Not all citizens were satisfied with Moore's explanation.

Victoria Hurley, 136 Border St., spokesperson for the group opposing the marina expansion, pointed out that the current zoning map, printed in 1969, showed that the residentially zoned area did indeed extend into the water. If this were the case, it would trigger a site plan review by the planning board.

Moore countered that the planning board had determined that the current map, showing the expansion of residential zoning into the water, was nothing more than a printer's error. The board went back and studied the1955 zoning map, which clearly showed that the residentially zoned area stops at the high-water mark.

"There's never been a site plan hearing (in town) on a dock, so why start here?"
— Planning Board Chairman Al Moore

The planning board, along with town counsel, also pored through records of town meetings to see if they could find an action between 1955 and 1969, the year the current map was printed, that would have indicated a change in zoning laws.

"If there had been a change [in the zoning map], it would have been as a result of an action taken at town meeting," Moore said. "We found no town records to show there was a reason to change the map."

Paul Pattison, 104 Elm St., raised the issue of potential parking and traffic problems at the expanded marina.

"I'm concerned about what it [the marina expansion] will do to traffic on Parker Avenue," Pattison said during the meeting.

Egan said that CHM owner Paul Trendowicz showed him a plan of 50 parking spaces for the 86 slips that would result from the proposed expansion.

"There should be adequate parking," Egan said, "but there is not a number of specific spaces required for a marina."

In a telephone interview, Egan explained that the floating aspect of the marina is not covered by zoning but the land-ward activities are. At this time, Egan is satisfied that Trendowicz has demonstrated he has enough parking.

"It appears the lot is sufficient," he said. Egan said if cars do end up parking along Parker Avenue then selectmen have the authority to prohibit parking on the street.

Moore, the planning board chairman, said Tuesday he had just met with Victoria and Michael Hurley and the expansion opponents still insist the zoning map — which shows the docks are in a residential zone — are correct. The couple provided Moore with some additional information on the matter.

"The Hurleys contend it is not an error," he said. Moore said he would show what the Hurleys collected to town counsel.

"This could end up in the planning board loop after all," Moore said, if counsel agrees with the Hurleys.

Victoria Hurley said Tuesday according to three zoning maps in 1969, 1976 and 1985, the entire peninsula is zoned residential and that zone extends to the town line which is the middle of Bailey's Creek.

"The bottom line is that town counsel's decision is based on a 1955 map," she said. "The parcel in question is not even on that map."

But Moore cautioned that this is not a "black and white issue" and regardless, the town has never regulated docks.

The dock is a structure, Moore said, but it is where the dock is located that is the issue. Town counsel feels it does not fall within the zoning of the town and therefore, the town has no jurisdiction over anything in the water.

"Over the years, the town has not tried to regulate docks," he said. But Moore said docks are regulated by the Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency.

"There's never been a site plan hearing (in town) on a dock, so why start here?" he asked.

Marty Cohn, spokesperson for Cohasset Harbor Marina, said Trendowicz had "jumped through every hoop" to expand his marina.

"He's met every permit requirement, every regulation," he said.

Cohn said Trendowicz is "disappointed" by the way the process unfolded. For more than two years, he has gone before the various town boards with plans for the project.

"The fact is he operated in good faith," Cohn said. "He lives in town, works in town and he wanted to work with the town. He wants to operate a successful marina in Cohasset."

Cohn said that 90 percent of the marina's customer base is Cohasset residents.

He pointed out that if selectmen had agreed to lobby the Army Corps of Engineers to move the federal anchorage line, as Trendowicz requested, then the need for pilings to anchor the docks could have been avoided. Pilings are considered less appealing aesthetically because they extend out of the water, and are especially prominent at low tide. Trendowicz had hoped to use bottom anchors for the docks but anchoring the docks that way would provide too much swing allowing the boats to drift into the federal channel. Encroaching on federal waters is punishable by hefty fines.

"The pilings are in, the boating season is about to begin and Paul is going full speed ahead," Cohn said.

Jerusalem Road Estates faces long road ahead

Sewer and conservation okay still needed

By Brian Brennan
CORRESPONDENT

While the planning board gave its conditional approval to developer Stephen Corey's plan for a subdivision to be named the Jerusalem Road Estates, it appears those conditions will be difficult for Corey to meet anytime in the near future. These conditions include gaining the approvals of the sewer commission and the conservation committee, neither of which will be an easy task.

In a statement at the multi-board meeting April 28, the sewer commission said it felt the need of the Little Harbor area to be connected to the Hull treatment plant must be addressed first before it can grant access to a sewer hookup for the proposed subdivision.

In addition, the sewer commissioners said that they wish to reserve extra capacity for sewer connections around Cohasset as the need arises.

Charles Humphreys, Corey's attorney, insisted that the sewer commission's current position is unfair toward his client.

"By limiting sewage connections, zoning becomes discriminatory," Humphreys said before the multi-board meeting. "A town must serve the entire town with a municipal service, and the developers are willing to pay for the gallonage."

Humphreys also said that the sewer commission's position of what he called "capillary systems" of sewer connections is not farsighted and could lead to potential lawsuits from future developers who wish to gain access to sewer connections.

"The subdivision is a dead duck without the ok of the sewer commission."
— Planning board chairman Al Moore

An agreement on a sewer connection will have to be reached before the proposed development can become a reality, because, as planning board chairman Alfred Moore put it, "The subdivision is a dead duck without the ok of the sewer commission."

While a sewage hookup is a major obstacle toward Corey gaining final approval from the planning board for the Jerusalem Road Estates project, the conservation commission must also give Corey the green light to begin construction.

At issue for the conservation commission is whether Rattlesnake Run will be classified as a river according to the Massachusetts Rivers Protection Act. The Rivers Act states that a river is classified as any "natural, flowing body of water that empties into any ocean, lake, or other river and that flows throughout the year." An intermittent stream does not qualify as a river under the Rivers Act because it does not flow throughout the year, which will be a key distinction in determining the status of Rattlesnake Run under the law.

According to the Rivers Act, a body of water meeting the above criteria is to be protected by a 200-foot riverfront area that extends on both sides of rivers and streams, which could alter Corey's plan for his subdivision should rattlesnake run be classified as a river.

Vee Roebuck, a longstanding member of the conservation committee and a former chairperson, said that the committee is scheduled to see Corey's group during its second meeting in May, and that the latest plans for the subdivision were just recently delivered to the committee.

As far as how Rattlesnake run will be classified, Roebuck said that the committee already has an opinion on the subject.

"We believe it is a perennial," she said. "If they [Corey's group] agree, then we'll all take a look at the plan. If they don't agree, there will probably be some kind of an appeal."

Guided tour of Miliken Memorial Path

Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation is an 813-acre property located in both Hingham and Cohasset with more than 12 miles of cart paths and foot trails weaving through a hemlock-pine-hardwood forest with scattered American holly trees.

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that a guided tour of Miliken Memorial Path at Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation will be held on Sunday, May 16 from 1:30-3:30 p.m., rain or shine.

Spend a couple of enjoyable hours with local naturalist Meg Moore as she leads a tour of this woodland garden path. The trail is flanked by native rhododendrons and orchids and is enhanced by an interior garden which was created in the early 1920s by summer resident, Mabel Minott Miliken.

Admission to this event is free to all, and you are encouraged to bring guests! Meet at the Cohasset parking area located across from Sohier St. on Route 3A.

Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation is an 813-acre property located in both Hingham and Cohasset with more than 12 miles of cart paths and foot trails weaving through a hemlock-pine-hardwood forest with scattered American holly trees. Clusters of azalea and rhododendron bushes bloom in the spring next to wildflowers and ferns.

Some of the most stunning features of Whitney & Thayer Woods reveal its glacial history. The trails weave around massive boulders, called "glacial erratics," three of which were named in the 1800s. Bigelow Boulder is so perched that one can crawl under and feel the smooth grooves left in the ledge beneath it by glacial scraping action some 7,000 years ago. Rooster Rock, with its "cockscomb" profile, is balanced 5 or 6 feet high atop a much smaller stone, which in turn rests on another large boulder. An even larger group of boulders, over 80 feet across and 100 feet long, is called Ode's Den, after Theodore "Ode" Pritchard, who took shelter there in 1828 following the loss of his home on Sohier St.

For more information, please call Marge Balzotti at the trustees' southeast regional office at 781-821-2977.

HOW MUCH OF YOUR HOME COMPUTER CAPACITY IS BEING WASTED?

Oh sure, you've got a nice computer. Maybe two or three or more. With a jillion giga-whatsis and scads of mega-stuff.

But are you getting all you paid for out of your home computer system?

Can your computers talk with each other, for example? Can they all access the same printers? Can more than one user interface with your MediaOne Express line?

Is your computer able to control the lighting or heating and air conditioning in your home? The security system? The call answering system? Can you watch what's happening in your home while you're away?

Now, it's all possible. Resi-Net can make it happen.

Resi-Net is the first company of its kind — specialists in residential and home-based business computer systems. Networking. Configuring. Home automation. Security. Web blocking. And more.

LIBRARY CORNER

Book sale

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library book sale will be held for two days ONLY this year on Friday, May 14, and Saturday, May 15, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. All hardcover books will be on sale for 50 cents and paperbacks for 25 cents. On Saturday, after 1 p.m., books can be purchased at $1 per bag. Call the library at 383-1348 if you have any donations, questions or would like to assist in the book sale.

Museum passes

The museum passes, provided through the Friends of the Library, have proved to be a tremendous benefit to the community, both culturally and financially. At an estimated savings of $25 per use, these passes provided more than $18,000 in cultural enrichment for the residents of Cohasset booked from April, 1998, to March, 1999. What a value for the town!

Come into the library and reserve your place for the Children's Museum; Computer Museum; Museum of Fine Arts; Museum of Science; New England Aquarium; John F. Kennedy Library and Museum; and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

Artist of the Month

Claffy Williams, a Cohasset resident and one of the South Shore Art Center's founders, will present her one-person show, "Inspirations II," at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library through June 2. A reception for the artist washeld at the library Sunday, May 2.

The show will features Williams' monotypes — "one print only" paintings created through a process of paint and other materials on plexiglass, then transferred to paper by compressing paper to plexiglass. The results are vividly created images of horses at play and colorfully formed shapes that leave the interpretation to one's imagination.

Williams graduated from the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and has become a well-known artist not only on the South Shore, but worldwide. Her resume lists a myriad of one-person and group shows that have taken place from the Ariel Gallery in Soho, N.Y. to the Grand Prix Fine Arts of Paris. Her latest one-person show was in 1998 at the Chinese Cultural Institute in Boston. Williams has won numerous awards including Blue Ribbons in the South Shore Art Festival as well as first and second places in the 1998 Dover Art Show.

Williams, a native of Brookline, moved to Cohasset with her husband after skiing with the 1938 American girls ski team. They were an Olympic class ski team and Williams kept in touch with many of her teammates for years later. She continues to ski and enjoys spending time on the slopes with her grandchildren.

Williams started painting in oil and acrylics with a realistic eye for her surroundings. Only when she began to look closely at the rocky shoreline surrounding her home, about 10 years ago, did she notice the abstraction in art that now defines the body of her work. She explored and played in the crags and began to expand her art to the abstract.

Williams sums up her art best in her resume statement, "Abstract painting addresses the spirit, whether influenced by nature or created out of one's mind. Free color and form narrates an idea. My paintings suggest a blend of Eastern qualities and Western abstraction. Nature is caring. Different moods in nature reflect life itself."

Come in and enjoy the show of Claffy Williams, a contributor to both the community and the arts.

Local man competes for National Kidney Foundation

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Richard Berard wants to raise money for the National Kidney Foundation and he's prepared to do whatever it takes. He'll even break out of prison if that's what he has to do to raise his goal of $15,000. The Forest Avenue resident is neither a criminal nor an escaped convict. He is a triathlete planning to compete in the "Escape from Alcatraz Triathlon" in San Francisco on June 5.

The triathlon includes a 1-1/2 mile swim from Alcatraz into the San Francisco Bay followed by a one-mile beach run, a 15-mile bicycle trip through the hills of San Francisco, and an eight mile run along the shoreline that culminates in a sprint up a 400 step sand ladder. Phew! The triathlon is a tough competition for anyone, but it's doubly difficult for Berard because his kidneys are functioning at only about 40 percent of their normal capacity.

Berard, who works at Capitol Forest Products in Hingham, was recently diagnosed with a chronic kidney ailment when he visited his doctor for a routine physical. Doctors told Berard, 43, that the ailment may have lain dormant in his body since he was 18. Berard will need dialysis or a kidney transplant within 18 months. As a working father with a wife and son, a transplant is the only viable option, Berard said. His brother may be able to donate a kidney for a transplant. If not, Berard will have to go onto a waiting list for a donor. For now, Berard is busy preparing for the extreme athletic event.

"The 'Escape From Alcatraz Triathlon' has been a dream race for me for sometime," Berard said. "I feel obligated to undertake this task now when I am still strong and my fitness is good. My future as a triathlete is somewhat uncertain and I don't want to miss this opportunity by not acting. Raising money for a worthy cause and completing this race is a living dream for me."

"I'm doing this for my mom, and dad, and my family and for the National Kidney Foundation."
— Richard Berard

Berard has been an amateur triathlete for eight years. For the past four years he has dreamed of completing the grueling "Escape From Alcatraz Triathlon." The televised competition attracts professional and amateur triathletes from all over the country. Hundreds of competitors brave the chilling waters and sharks of San Francisco Bay to compete in the event.

Berard said he has had to face his own mortality because of his disorder and the recent deaths of his parents. His father died not long ago after an agonizing battle with Alzheimer's disease. His mother, an athletic woman, died suddenly of a heart attack earlier this year.

"I'm doing this for my mom, and dad, and my family and for the National Kidney Foundation," Berard said. "I feel good that I can do something good for other people by raising money for the National Kidney Foundation."

Berard is already in training for the event. Next month, will begin swimming in the frigid local waters to prepare for the first leg of the event. Currently, local water temperatures stand at about 44 degrees. The waters in San Francisco bay will be about 50 degrees for the triathlon.

Berard's doctor has given him clearance to compete in the event. Although he may experience a slight decrease in endurance because of his kidney ailment, Berard doesn't expect it to be a serious problem. He hopes to complete the race in under three hours.

Berard got the idea for the fund raiser from a friend who raised money in a similar fashion last year for cancer research. He said local residents and businesses have already helped out with donations to the National Kidney Foundation. Anyone wishing to make a donation to the foundation on behalf of Berard send a check to the National Kidney Foundation, 105 Eastern Ave., Dedham, MA 02027-9103. The foundation advises money donors to write "Richard Berard's Escape From Alcatraz" in the memo section of the check. The telephone number for the National Kidney Foundation is (781)326-7225.

Skippers fall short

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The hole just keeps gettng deeper for the Cohasset Skippers. Now at 3-7, Cohasset has dropped two gut-wrenching games to Hull and Carver. After three straight wins, the Cohasset Nine couldn't come through in the clutch and now face a real challenge to make the state tourney.

Coming off home wins against Provincetown and South Shore Vo-Tech, Cohasset tried to collect its first road victory and up its record to 3-5 over April vacation in their second game against Vo-Tech. The Skippers were several players short of a full roster, as five members of the team had gone on vacation, and several possible junior varsity call-ups also had taken vacations. Thus, Coach Knurek's squad was left short-handed looking for their third win.

Upcoming baseball games

Monday, May 10: at Norton
Tuesday, May 11: at Norwell
Thursday, May 13: Carver
Monday, May 17: at Hull
Thursday, May 20: Abington

It seemed to have little effect, though, as Cohasset romped, destroying its host by a score of 17-1. The visitors jumped out early, scoring four runs in the first inning, highlighted by John-Paul Laugelle's RBI triple. In fact, Laugelle wopuld pick up four ribbies on the day, putting him in second place behind Ben Ketchum for the team lead. Ryan Story would have a perfect day, both in the field and at the plate. Story played first base and singled and scored three times. Nick Bolster also played well. The freshman knocked in two runs with an RBI double in the fourth.

Jim O'Sullivan took the hill for Cohasset and couldn't hit his spots in the bottom of the first inning. The first runner walked and would score later, giving Vo-Tech one run back. But O'Sullivan settled down after that and errorless defense behind him held the home team scoreless the rest of the way.

The key to Cohasset's offensive explosion came in the second inning when catcher Greg Parkinson came to the plate with two outs and the bases loaded. After working a 1-2 count, Parkinson cleared the bases with a double and the ballgame was as good as over.

In fact, it was over soon after that. After it became clear that the barrage of hits and runs wouldn't stop anytime soon, both coaches and umpires agreed upon calling the game, citing the delicately named "slaughter rule."

Little League season is officially underway

Patrick and Brendan were glad the baseball season had finally arrived, and they can get on the field themselves. They'll also spend the summer following the progress of their favorite player, Ken Griffey Jr.

Red and white bunting draped the outfield fence, and the American flag was hoisted up beyond the centerfield fence.

The Deer Hill School marching band was on hand to play the National Anthem.

"Captain" Hugh Morgan, a fixture at Barnes field, was busy cooking up hotdogs and hamburgers in his snack bar behind home plate.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray threw out the first ball from the pitcher's mound as she has so many times over the years. "It's great to win, but great sportsmanship is what you should be striving for in every game."

The majority of the 360 kids who play for the 27 teams in the league were wearing their uniforms and looking ahead to their best spring and summer of baseball yet.

The morning started with the annual parade to the field. With its siren cutting through the early morning calm, Engine 1 of the Cohasset Fire Dept. led the young ballplayers down South, then North Main St. to their final destination along the edge of the outfield grass. Bringing up the rear on Engine 4 were the players from last year's league champion Pirates team.

Tina Fiori-Danielson thanked the Cohasset Policemen's Association for its commitment to the children as she presented the Leo J. Fiori award to Detective Rick Grassie. Grassie accepted the award on behalf of the association.

Skippers fall short

After reaching the 3-5 mark, Cohasset faced Hull in another winnable game. The Skippers couldn't seem to solve Hull's pitcher, however, and went down 3-1. For the second straight game, Pergola pitched a complete game without allowing any earned runs, but was saddled with the loss nonetheless.

A real heartbreaker came the next day when Cohasset, again in desperate need of a win, traveled to Carver to face the Crusaders. Cohasset jumped up early, scoring five runs in the second inning. Everybody hit, as Cohasset batted through the order. Laugelle, O'Sullivan, and Greg O'-Keeffe all tripled and Greg Taylor doubled. Perhaps even more importantly, the rally was ignited by the bottom of the Skippers' order, the first time all season that the bottom has produced in such a way.

Ketchum pitched well early on, with good command of his pitches. But he tired in the fourth and Knurek had to call on Laugelle to stop the bleeding. Laugelle pitched well in relief of Ketchum, ending Carver's five run inning, but then got into a little trouble of his own in Carver's half of the fifth. O'Sullivan then took his turn on the mound, retiring Carver's Brandon Perry on a high pop-up, gathered in by Schwerin.

In the sixth, though, O'Sullivan allowed a one-out double. The runner scored on a double error play. After another error, a base hit, a wild pitch, and two more runs, Carver had taken an 8-7 lead.

The Skippers' well wasn't deep enough in the bottom of the seventh and they went home whipped. The loss was cruel in and of itself, but the fact that it set Cohasset to 3-7 instead of a much more respectable 4-6 made it double edged.

With a narrowing margin of error, Cohasset faced Abington on Tuesday, if weather permitted, and Hanover on Thursday. This weekend, they take off for Nantucket in their second annual double header road trip. Halfway through the season, the Skippers know they have no room for any more "woulda, coulda, shoulda" losses.

Thanks mom for a great sporting life

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE HARDMAN

The knee pads were inside out.

The shoulder pads were on backwards.

The rib pads weren't even on at all.

"Son, who dressed you?" asked the PeeWee football coach. "Did your mother dress you?"

"Well, ya," answered the 11-year-old defensive tackle-right guard.

It was our first time, mom and me, playing football with pads.

How were we supposed to know about what was the correct way to put on shoulder pads?

A day earlier, we went over the head coach's house, went through his cellar, picking out helmets and a jersey number.

My dad knew, but he was working late. I just had enough time to put the uniform on and get into his car for a ride to the practice field. I don't think he even had a chance to check out my equipment.

"You know, Hardman, you can't go on the field looking like that," said the coach, who I knew was laughing his head off inside. "Go over there and take off your uniform."

I figured my mom had cost me a football career. Surely, the coach was going to take the uniform away from me one day into my football experience.

A failure at 11.

Expecting the final doom, I took off my uniform. Because I didn't put my hip pads in correctly, I was going to be a strictly touch, backyard player for the rest of my life.

This was before the soccer boom and there was no youth cross-country programs. Basically, I had no other fall athletic options.

"This is how the knee pads are supposed to go in," said the coach, adjusting my equipment. "Are you paying attention?"

You're darn right I was. I was going to go home that night and practice taking my uniform on and off. I was going to show my mom, so the coach wouldn't yell at her too.

My mom never played sports. She didn't like sports. But, being a mom, she did the mom thing, sitting on a cold bench, watching a football game in October, standing next to a baseball field, swatting flies away and trying not to get hit by a ball in the spring.

"I like your track meets better," she said, while I was running in college. "You can't get hurt and I can see you run."

I did ended up blowing out my knee in a college track meet, but I understand where she was coming from being a non-sports fan having to live in a sports fanatic's house.

She did her part and more. She bought baseball gloves, hockey skates, basketballs and even golf equipment.

When you become a parent you appreciate what your parents did for you.

My mom died of cancer two years ago. While she was going through her lengthy illness, we spent afternoons and evenings talking about the football equipment experience, how she made me realize that the world wasn't going to end when I was sent back to the minors in Little League. She remembered how a conversation with my college track coach determined where I ended up going to school.

My track coach is one smart guy and he called my mother when I was at school to explain about the university and the team, mostly about the education I would receive.

"You're going there," she announced at the dinner table. "He's such a nice guy."

By the time my mother became ill, my two children had already been a born. I have a daughter, Katie, 7, who is just getting interested in sports and a son, Matthew, who I bought his first baseball glove for the other day.

"I know you're going to do it," my mom said, "but don't push them into sports. Let them decide if they want to play. Don't turn them into sports nuts."

I've taken my mom's advice...for the most part.

The other morning as I was preparing for work, I noticed the two little boys next door playing catch on a beautiful spring morning.

"Matthew," I said to my three-year-old son, "don't you want to go out and play catch with the boys?"

He answered yes and was out the door like a shot.

I smiled. This was good. My son was starting to play baseball. I went into the bathroom to shave with a smile on my face.

When I came out, I looked outside the window. My son, the would be baseball player was in a circle with the other boys...reading his library book to them.

I laughed.

I knew that my mom was sure smiling about that one.

Happy Mother's Day to all the mothers from Sylvia's son.

We'll make you smile.

DAR honors Good Citizen Award recipients

On Sunday, April 11, the Col. Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution held a meeting to honor this year's recipients of the local DAR Good Citizen Award. This award is given annually to a member of the senior class at accredited high schools. The program is on the National Association of Secondary School Principals list of contest and activities. The students are selected by the faculty and voted on by the members of the Senior class. They are judged on the qualities of dependability, service, leadership and patriotism. The students honored this year are Megan Connolly, of Cohasset High School, Jeffry McSharry of Rockland High School, and Robin Milligan of Whitman-Hanson High School. Unable to attend were Kristin Buckley of Hingham High School, and Heather Russo of Hull High School. Each student was presented with a certificate and pin from the DAR. They also were presented with House of Representatives citations by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and Rob O'Rourke for Rep. Robert Nylan. Sen. Robert Hedlund also presented each with a State Senate citation. Also attending the meeting was State DAR Regent Carole Boulris.

DAR Good Citizen Award recipient, Megan Connolly, with state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, state DAR Regent Carole Boulais and state Sen. Robert Hedlund at the April 11 reception.

Megan Connolly of Cohasset is the daughter of Ed and Betsy Connolly. She has been active in school as the President of the Social Awareness Club and volunteering with the Mary-Martha Learning Center. She is on the student council and representative to the School Committee and State Education Council. She was captain of the field hockey, basketball and lacrosse teams and represented Cohasset at the state level for the National Women in Sports. She has traveled to Appalachia for the ASP. She will attend Catholic University next year.

Kristen Buckley of Hingham is the daughter of Stephen and Nancy Buckley. In school she is president of the Student Council, captain of the basketball team and was the lead in the school's drama/music production "Crazy for You." She is also co-director of the Kid's Cabaret in Hingham. Kristin will attend Emerson College in the fall, majoring in communications.

Heather Russo of Hull is the daughter of James and Betsy Russo. At school, she is a peer leader, captain of the softball team, a member of SADD and a member of the National Honor Society. She has volunteered in physical therapy at the Hull Preschool and at SportsMed. She will attend UMass/Lowell in the fall and major in exercise physiology.

Jeffry McSharry of Rockland has been active in the Rockland School sports program and will attend Bentley College in the fall.

Robin Milligan of Hanson is the daughter of Brian and Linnea Milligan. At school she is active with the Student Council, drama/music and was volleyball captain. Outside of school she has been active at her church and was first runner-up in the Junior Miss scholarship program. She will attend Bridgewater State College next year and hopes to become a second-grade teacher.

The DAR is proud to honor the recipients of this year's DAR Good Citizen Award.

Six-hour lighthouse cruise

The Quincy-based Boston Harbor Explorers just released tickets for the first of their popular "Lighthouse Cruise Extravaganza" to be offered this summer. Tickets are available now for the cruise to take place Sunday, June 6. The public is invited to set sail for the six-hour cruise showcasing 12 of North America's most legendary and historic lighthouses in North America.

Some of the highlights of the tour will be Boston Light, which was blown up by the British on their departure of Boston Harbor during the Revolutionary War; Minot's Ledge Light, America's most dangerous lighthouse station, where two keepers plummeted to their deaths during a gale in 1851; and the famous Twin Lights at Thacher's Island, where in the late 1800s Keeper Bray's wife was alone on the island with her two babies and single-handedly kept the twin lights burning during a blizzard. Other lighthouses featured on the tour include: Graves, Long Island, Deer Island, Marblehead, Hospital Point, Baker's Island, Eastern Point, Ten Pound Island and Gloucester Breakwater lights.

The cruise departs from Rowes Wharf, Boston, at 10 a.m. and returns to Rowes Wharf at 4 p.m. Tickets are $30 adults, $26 seniors, $20 children and are available by sending a check or money order to: Boston Harbor Explorers, P.O. Box 690744, Quincy, 02269, or call the Explorers at (617) 479-1871 for additional information.

The Boston Harbor Explorers is a non profit organization dedicated to increasing awareness of the Boston Harbor Islands and the Lighthouses of Boston Harbor and Massachusetts Bay.

Nooks and Crannies of Cohasset

The Cohasset Historical Society mini series of "Nooks and Crannies of Cohasset's Past Come Alive" will take place at the Lightkeeper's Cottage, with refreshments, at 7:45 p.m. on the following dates: Thursday, May 6, A Brief Look at Cohasset's Heritage Trail houses—Tom Gruber; Thursday, May 13, How colonial houses got that way in Cohasset—John Hovorka; Thursday, May 27, How Beechwood's Past Shapes Cohasset's Future — Rebecca Bates-McArthur and friends. For additional information call John Hovorka at 781-383-0766.

Mystery, Horror, Intrigue

Bird walk at World's End

The Trustees of Reservations will conduct an early morning bird walk at World's End on Saturday, May 8, beginning at 7 a.m., rain or shine.

Plan to spend a couple of enjoyable hours with recreational birder Kevin Godfrey as he leads the search for both migratory and field-nesting species on this beautiful property.

Members of The Trustees of Reservations will be admitted for free, non-members must pay the $4 entrance fee. Meet in front of the Ranger Station.

World's End, a peninsula of two glacial drumlins joined by a narrow beach of rough sand, divides Hingham Bay and the historic Weir River. For over a century, this 251-acre property has been admired for its dramatic topography and magnificent landscaping.

To reach World's End, follow Summer St. from the rotary at Hingham Harbor 1/4 mile to the first set of traffic lights and turn left onto Martin's Lane. Follow Martin's Lane 1/4 mile to its end where the entrance to World's End is located.

For more information, please call Marge Balzotti at The Trustees' southeast regional office at 781-821-2977.

MITZVAH DAY

When nine-year-old Harry Rein did the Walk for Hunger, he built up an appetite of his own. Sunday morning at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham was overflowing with activities for Mitzvah Day. Mitzvah is a Hebrew word meaning commandment and has come to be understood as a good deed. A celebratory barbecue was held at the temple at the conclusion of the morning's events.

Organ recital at St. Stephen's Church

As part of its Sunday concert series, St. Stephen's Church is presenting organist David S. Macfarlane in an organ recital Sunday, May 16, at 3 p.m.

Macfarlane is presently director of music and organist for the Church of the Holy Trinity on Manhattan's Upper West Side. He is a recitalist, being chosen as organist for Pope John's II Mass in Giant's Stadium during the 1995 Papal Visitation, and has also played throughout the United States.

Macfarlane has served as dean of the New Jersey Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. He is founder and conductor of the Marion Choral Society. In addition to playing works by Mendelssohn and Bach, Macfarlane will perform the suite "Rubrics" by Loclair, a set of musical commentaries on liturgical instructions from the Book of Common Prayer.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicapped accessible and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. A free-will offering will be taken. For more information, call (781) 383-1083.

To override or not? That is the question

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

If voters do not approve an override on May 22, the world will not come to an end. The schools will not close and town hall will not shut its doors. But there will be real and significant reductions in school and municipal services. That's the message the school committee and a divided board of selectmen tried to get out at a sparsely attended informational meeting Monday night at the high school. Only 23 residents sat scattered inside the high school auditorium. Five members of the advisory committee sat in the front of the auditorium observing the discussion.

"We want to let the residents decide the level at which cuts will be made. That's why there are three choices. Any question is approved if a majority of voters vote in favor of it."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The board of selectmen co-sponsored the meeting and showed deep divisions within its ranks. Selectman Diane Sullivan is opposed to any override. Selectman Ronnie McMorris wants people to understand that there will be real cuts in municipal services without an override. Selectman Tom Callahan believes the town needs an override, albeit not for the highest amount listed on the ballot. Selectman Merle Brown believes voters should have the chance to vote on smaller overrides rather than the $766,000 or nothing that failed at the polls last month. New selectman Fred Koed did not offer his opinion at the meeting.

The town's current financial crisis began on March 22 when town meeting approved a $20.26 million municipal budget that was out of balance by $766,154. At the April 10 town election, voters defeated an override for $766,154 to cover the deficit. By state law town meeting must balance the budget before it can set the tax rate for the new fiscal year, which starts on July 1, 1999.

Town leaders have come up with a complex plan to address the town's budget woes. Town meeting will convene on Monday, May 17 to discuss the budget crisis. Town Manager

Selectmen still split on budget

Special town meeting is Monday

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

At this point selectmen will go to Monday's town meeting deeply divided on which budget to support.

There are four separate budgets before voters that could be balanced by three different override figures or no override at all. What will happen Monday is a discussion on the figures and what cuts will be made under each scenario. Then town meeting is expected to adjourn to a continued session the Monday following the special election slated for Saturday, May 22 where the amount of tax hike (or none at all) will be decided. The first session of the special town meeting gets underway at 7:30 p.m. May 17 in the high school gymnasium.

What created this budgetary nightmare is the town's approval of a budget at the March 27 annual town meeting that was some $766,000 in the red. Voters subsequently defeated an override to make up the deficit at the annual town election April 10. An override was needed because under Prop. 2-1/2, a state law, the town cannot raise its tax levy more than

Advisory committee members sought

Two new members are being sought for the advisory committee whose main role is to advise on financial matters.

Members Rick Flynn and Lee Jenkins are both stepping down after six years, the maximum amount of years allowed to serve on that board under the town by-law. Interested citizens should stop by the selectmen's office at town hall or call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

More news on campaign financing

The three selectmen candidates in the April 10 town election filed updated campaign finance reports with the town clerk's office. Contributors of $50 or more must be listed on the report.

Fred Koed, who won a seat on the board of selectmen in the April 10 town election, reported $670 in donations in the period from April 1 to May 8. Those include: Jonathan Creighton, 23 Cushing Road ($50); Kristie Hendricksen & Tom Fallon, 12 Jerusalem Road ($100); Doris & John Golden, 520 Jerusalem Road ($50); Deb & John Nugent 151 Beach St. ($100); William A. McDermott 206 Savin Hill Ave., Dorchester ($50); John & Claire McDonough, 520 Jerusalem Road ($50); and Frances & William Weeks, 320 Border St. ($75).

Keod reported $3,571.48 in expenditures over the same period that included newspaper advertising, campaign services, mailings and election night music and food.

Ronnie McMorris, who was reelected, reported $696.51 in donations from April 1 through May 7. Those include: Darilynn and Laurence Evans, 4 Evergreen Lane ($100); Donald Staszko, 172 Beach St. ($100); and Barbara O'Pray, 172 Beach St. ($100). McMorris reported $1,400.07 in expenditures during the same period including advertising, printing, postage and food and beverages for election night.

Nan Roth, who lost her bid for reelection to the board of selectmen, reported $670.90 in donations from April 1 to May 7. Those include: Donald Staszko, 172 Beach St. ($100); Christy & Andrea Mihos, 130 Beach St. ($100); William & Frances Weeks, 1 Beacon St., Boston ($75); Barbara O'Pray, 172 Beach St. ($100); and Samuel & Frances Wakeman, 251 Atlantic Ave., ($150). Roth spent $1410.18 during the same period on items such as postage and advertising.

Committees disbanded

Selectmen plan to disband the following committees at their next meeting: cable-TV council, call firefighter committee, insurance advisory committee, investment advisory committee, Milliken Field Construction Committee, and the Straits Pond Committee. The board of health will appoint the mosquito control committee instead of selectmen. Town Manager Mark Haddad will send letters to any remaining board members of these committees to get their input before selectmen vote to disband the committees at their May 25 meeting.

Help with stickers sought

Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the recycling committee, said help is needed selling stickers at the RTF on weekends for seven weeks. The hours are 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., he said. The position pays $7 an hour. Anyone interested should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad 383-4105.

Clarification is noted

A detail in a story on campaign financing that appeared in last week's Cohasset Mariner warrants some clarification.

The Override Questions Committee, L.C. Jenkins treasurer, was incorrectly identified as Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers. The Override Questions Committee is a political action committee which filed a campaign finance report with the town clerk's office as required by state law. The committee reported no donations and had no expenditures for the April 10 town election that included the $766 override ballot question, which was defeated.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

A NEW NICHE FOR HOME OFFICES

If your kitchen remodeling plans leave little room for a home office in the kitchen, try turning your sights on the living, or family room. Rooms that have fireplaces that jut into the room will be flanked by niches that might be going to waste. If so, expand your cabinet order to include a desk and storage cabinets, that are specifically tailored to match the style and materials found in your living or family room. They might include bookcases that impart the feeling of a library to the room, especially in rich wood veneers. Purchase a panel or "skin," for the back wall for a finished built-in look. And, specify a desk base that includes a deep file drawer, pull out keyboard shelf and roll-out shelves for printers and other computer equipment.

Desk areas serve both an aesthetic and practical purpose. If you work at home we can help you create a beautiful home office.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN remains on the forefront of interior design techniques and can help you create beautiful rooms that accommodate all your needs. We will visit your home, review your preferences, and develop an individualized interior design plan that takes into account all elements of a room. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services!

HINT: Remember, cabinet manufacturers are not limited to kitchen cabinetry. They can provide built-in cabinetry for any room in the house.

GAS LEAK

Recently we were awarded a contract from the local gas company that included the installation of its rental water heaters. It turned out to be a lucrative side line for the company, and the men didn't mind the work. A water heater installation can be completed by two men in about an hour and a half, provided there is no additional work involved, caused by corroded piping or poor venting. Most of the men began to get quite efficient at it, and learned how to cut corners to save time on the job. Many times the job could be completed by one man with the helper only being needed for the carrying in of the new heater and the removal of the old one. One morning I sent Phil to a replacement water heater, and told him to disconnect the old one and I would be along shortly if he needed any help with the new. I was delayed at the office for about a half an hour. When I arrived on the job I found my plumber laying face down on the basement floor. He had one hand braced against the gas pipe and with the other he was desperately trying to reach the tool kit that was a few feet out of his reach. "Thank God you're here!", he yelled. "I broke off the gas pipe at the foundation wall twenty minutes ago, go shut it off." Gas pressure in a residential home is quite low so you can seal off a broken pipe with just your hand. But you can also leak enough gas in a short time to cause an explosion. We were very lucky.

Birdwatchers flock to World's End

PHOTOS/FRED ROBERTSON

A group of enthusiastic birders, with binoculars in hand, flocked to World's End at 7 a.m. Saturday.

Event attracts early risers

By Josh Myerov
CORRESPONDENT

A small piece of advice from a reporter turned birdwatcher for the day — don't wear a leather jacket. The last thing I was thinking about while getting dressed at 6:30 on a Saturday morning to go nature walking at World's End was whether or not my attire would go over well with my fellow birders.

I still don't know how birders in general feel about wrapping oneself in dead animal skin, but I can't imagine the practice being looked upon fondly by devoted nature lovers.

Nonetheless, an hour-and-a-half into the walk, equipped with a little bit of bird knowledge under my (leather) belt, I was feeling slightly less self-conscious and more able to enjoy the marvelous sights and sounds of Hingham's own 250-acre woodland site.

Ornithologist Kevin Godfrey of Hingham led the walk with the assistance of Helen Cross of Hull and several knowledgeable birders among the crew of 20 early risers.

I was glad to discover as the walk progressed that others in the group were as unknowledgeable as myself about birds. They just happened to be dressed more appropriately.

As many as thirty species of warblers pass through World's End during the year, explained our guide, not to mention five species of vireos. And I couldn't have named one.

But, on this gray, misty morning, the abundant variety of birds that normally frequents the area this time of year were simply not showing up. Nor, as several veteran birders assured us novices, were the birds' colors as vivid and alive as they would be against an ideal clear, blue-sky background.

But I wasn't complaining. It was enough for me to identify, binoculars in hand, a yellow warbler, with the help of our guides. Kevin Godfrey even offered up his rendition of the warbler's song as a method for remembering its distinctive call. "Sweet, sweet, she is very sweet," intoned Godfrey.

As far as I was concerned, we had seen everything. House finches and gold finches, snowy egrets and green-winged teal, northern flickers and black starlings just to name a few.

Some species were returning from vacations in South America and would set up camp for a while right here in our backyards. Others would continue as far north in Canada as the trees will take them.

But just as wonderful as identifying the birds with our binoculars, were the tidbits of information thrown out for everyone to digest throughout the walk. The orchard oriole, it turns out, is a smaller, slimmer species than the Baltimore oriole, identifiable by his darker, more burnt orange than his more popular cousin. We saw both of them.

The orchard oriole, it turns out, is a smaller, slimmer species than the Baltimore oriole, identifiable by his darker, more burnt orange than his more popular cousin. We saw both of them.

Cowbirds are one of the bandits of the bird world, said Godfrey, depositing their over-sized eggs in the nests of unsuspecting small birds, taking advantage of the surrogate mothers' instincts to raise the cowbird young for them.

And so, soon enough, I began to see how addictive birding could become. If someone pointed out a mockingbird located at two o'clock in the dead oak tree behind the purple flowering bush, I might actually find it. And I might even focus my binoculars before it flies away.

In the end, nobody ever mentioned the leather jacket that I so shamelessly wore. Perhaps they didn't even notice. Next time however, I'll be sure to wear more appropriate birding attire — a fleece pullover, sweatpants, and sneakers — so as not to stick out like a cowbird egg in a chickadee nest.

The Trustees of Reservations is a non-profit organization that maintains 81 publicly accessible landscapes across Massachusetts. The Trustees will sponsor many educational and recreational activities throughout the coming months. The next bird walk at World's End will take place Saturday, May 22 at 7 a.m.. Guided tour of Miliken Memorial Path

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that a guided tour of Miliken Memorial Path at Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation will be held on Sunday, May 16 from 1:30-3:30 p.m., rain or shine.

Spend a couple of enjoyable hours with local naturalist Meg Moore as she leads a tour of this woodland garden path. The trail is flanked by native rhododendrons and orchids and is enhanced by an interior garden which was created in the early 1920s by summer resident, Mabel Minott Miliken.

Admission to this event is free to all, and you are encouraged to bring guests! Meet at the Cohasset parking area located across from Sohier St. on Route 3A.

Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation is an 813-acre property located in both Hingham and Cohasset with more than 12 miles of cart paths and foot trails weaving through a hemlock-pine-hardwood forest with scattered American holly trees. Clusters of azalea and rhododendron bushes bloom in the spring next to wildflowers and ferns.

Some of the most stunning features of Whitney & Thayer Woods reveal its glacial history. The trails weave around massive boulders, called "glacial erratics," three of which were named in the 1800s. Bigelow Boulder is so perched that one can crawl under and feel the smooth grooves left in the ledge beneath it by glacial scraping action some 7,000 years ago. Rooster Rock, with its "cockscomb" profile, is balanced 5 or 6 feet high atop a much smaller stone, which in turn rests on another large boulder. An even larger group of boulders, over 80 feet across and 100 feet long, is called Ode's Den, after Theodore "Ode" Pritchard, who took shelter there in 1828 following the loss of his home on Sohier St.

For more information, please call Marge Balzotti at the trustees' southeast regional office at 781-821-2977.

To override or not? That is the question on May 22

Mark Haddad is hoping that voters will discuss the budget on May 17, then agree to continue the meeting until after the override election. Once the election is over, town meeting voters will know exactly how much money the town has for the budget. If town meeting approves an unbalanced budget on May 17 that is contingent upon an override that ultimately fails, voters will have to return on May 22 to re-balance the budget.

Voters will have three override options at the polls:

• The first option is for a $612,000 override that would require $54,000 in school cuts and $97,926 in municipal reductions. This option would increase the tax rate by $1.04 per $1,000 in assessed home valuation. The owner of a median-priced $344,000 home would pay an additional $354.77 in property taxes. The override would account for $221.73 of the tax increase.

• The second option is for a $509,554 override that would require $148,055 in school cuts and $107,212 in municipal reductions. This option would increase the tax rate by 93 cents. The owner of a median-priced home would pay an additional $317.25 in property taxes. The override would account for $184.21 of the total tax increase.

• The Third option is for a $380,000 override that would require $223,195 in school cuts and $161,625 in municipal reductions. This option would increase the tax rate by 79 cents. The owner of a median-priced home would pay an additional $269.49 in property taxes. The override would account for $136.45 of the tax increase.

• A fourth default option would occur if voters reject all three options. Without an override, the school committee will have to trim $445,000 from its budget and the municipal side will have to make $320,452 in cuts.

Any override that receives a majority of "yes" votes will be approved. If voters approve more than one override, the higher-priced one will prevail. All of the overrides require a simple majority vote to be approved.

"We want to let the residents decide the level at which cuts will be made," Haddad said. "That's why there are three choices. Any question is approved if a majority of voters vote in favor of it."

At the May 10 informational meeting, Sullivan pointed out that approving any override would result in a permanent tax increase. Sullivan also expressed anger at the School Committee for negotiating large pay raises and an extra step increase for teachers during a fiscal crisis. She said the override was mostly for the schools.

School Committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the school budget increases are necessary to maintain the high quality of the Cohasset school system.

"If this override doesn't pass, our fine school system will start down a slippery slope to mediocrity and it will never come back," DeGiacomo said.

Resident Roy Fitzsimmons lashed out at the school committee and selectmen for trying to pass another override after the first one failed in April.

"The voters spoke at the election and said 'no' to an override," Fitzsimmons said. "Now you're back here again for another swing at the bat."

Although the meeting was designed to offer information about the various override options and the budget cuts, most of the discussion focused on the increases in the school budget.

But there are significant cuts proposed in both municipal and school budgets without an override.

Police Chief Brian Noonan would lose the summer seasonal officer program and two new cruisers if voters reject any override. Noonan said the seasonal officer program costs $16,000, yet generates $26,000 in parking ticket and citation revenue.

"It's not even about the money," Noonan said. "It's about the loss of part of our community policing. We post those officers at the bridges for safety, on walking patrols at Sandy Beach, and on bike patrols. It would be a tremendous loss for the town."

Schools Athletic Director Clark Chatterton said he will have to cut 15 coaches and 14 teams if the town rejects an override. The school committee will eliminate all skiing and sailing, as well as sub-varsity teams in football, basketball, baseball, soccer and ice hockey.

"I'm not adopting a 'just you wait and see' attitude toward the potential cuts," Chatterton said. "I'm proud of this town, and if this is what the taxpayers want, then I'll work with what I have. If we cut teams, we will save money. But we will lose the hundreds of hours or enjoyment we provide to the students and their parents, relatives, friends, and opponents at sporting events. We had a lacrosse game the other night with 200 people in attendance."

Recreation Director Jack Worley stands to lose $15,000 for a teen center coordinator. Worley said the town has managed to continue construction on the teen center with mostly private funding. The center should be done in a few months, but without a coordinator there is no one to run the facility. Worley said that cutting sports and the teen coordinator leaves a lot of teenagers in town with no extracurricular activities after school.

Wigmore Pierson and former selectman Nan Roth will host a live televised discussion of the budget problems tonight at the selectmen's meeting room from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. Residents can attend the meeting or watch the live broadcast on cable channel three. Detailed information about the proposed school cuts is available at the superintendent of school's office and the selectmen's office. The proposed municipal cuts are listed in the town meeting warrant.

Associate to sewer commission

Town counsel said the sewer commission could appoint a volunteer associate member as long as that member has no official duties and does not vote, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

The sewer commission voted recently to appoint Ted Guild, its former long-time chairman, as an associate member. Guild, who served 16 years on the commission, did not run for reelection this spring.

"Town counsel informed me today that the sewer commission can create a volunteer position that has no legal standing," Haddad said. In other words, the associate member cannot act as an elected sewer commissioner.

Haddad explained that associate members on the zoning board participate in all negotiations and deliberations and can vote when regular member is absent. Associate members on the conservation commission cannot vote but by being associates, receive training so they understand the technical issues when they become full members.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris asked that Haddad clarify what Guild is being asked to do. In a memo to selectmen and the health board, sewer commissioners said Guild would perform tasks assigned by the sewer commission and is currently "assigned to capacity utilization issues."

"We are pleased to have the benefit of Ted's knowledge and historical perspective as a resource," the commission wrote.

At least one selectman backed the idea. Diane Sullivan said the commission was "brilliant enough to tap into 20 years of knowledge.

"For Mr. Guild to give his time at his age, we should be grateful for his assistance," she said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said he got a call from another individual who would like to serve as an associate. He suggested the commission open the door up to others expressing interest.

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, said she was concerned about Guild's new role and hoped selectmen would investigate further.

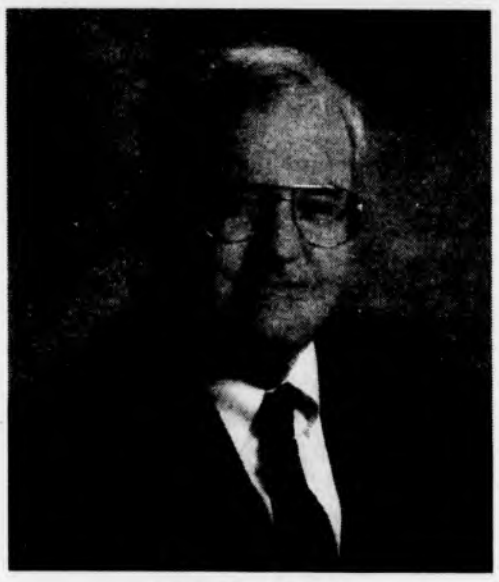
Why Are Your Neighbors Voting YES, YES, YES on Questions 1a, 1b & 1c?



Chris Ford
Cohasset Businessman

"A 'yes, yes, yes' vote on the override will cost us: approximately 61 cents a day for the average house in Cohasset. A 'no' vote will also cost us: as a negative impact on our most valued material asset, our homes. Simply put, a family that is willing and able to spend $314,000 for a home wants and expects good schools. If they think the schools here do not measure up, it is reason enough for them to buy elsewhere."

Liz Buckley
Former Student/Current Teacher

"The whole reason I went into teaching was because of the great teachers I had at Cohasset High. We have a great system, and we should be striving to make it better."

Ron Goodwin
Cohasset Businessman

"Because we are a community, we benefit from all of the services provided by the Town—schools, police and fire protection. Since these services are managed as a unit and supported by our taxes, they are far less expensive than if we had to contract for each of them individually. I am therefore supporting the override."

"Going to school in Cohasset has allowed me to truly get to know many of my teachers and coaches. A few of them have even helped me outside of the classroom and playing field. They have been not only advisors to me, but also friends who I know will last far beyond my high school career."

Justin Golden

MBTA funding changes could add up to local savings

House plan calls for cutting annual assessments

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

After decades of paying for public transportation they don't receive, seven South Shore towns and 14 other communities across the state may finally see a major drop in their annual MBTA assessment.

The House voted last week to support a budget amendment to dramatically reduce over the next six years what towns pay to support the state transportation authority.

Under the House plan, towns like Marshfield — which will pay more than a half million to the T this year — and Scituate which is assessed for close to $400,000 annually — will see more than a 75 percent drop in their MBTA bills by the year 2006. Towns like Hingham that receive and pay for service now will see savings of nearly 50 percent.

Other communities, like Kingston and Abington, that have recently received transit service but pay nothing to the T, will now be asked to pay their fair share. Overall, the plan calls for increasing the number of cities and towns billed for MBTA service from 78 to 175.

The proposal represents a compromise between lawmakers and the Cellucci administration. While legislators like state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, have long pushed to eliminate assessments for towns that get no service, the House proposal radically reduces those community's bills and more equitably distributes the burden among all towns with transit service or adjacent to town's with service.

"I have tried to rid the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull from any MBTA assessment. At least we will see our assessments go down, while those who have always had service will now be paying an assessment," Murray said.

The assessment changes are part of a larger plan to revamp the way the MBTA is financed. Funding changes have been a long time in coming, noted Hynes, who began work to change the assessment formula 20 years ago as a Marshfield advisory board member.

Hynes said some relief was seen during the 1980s when local legislators were successful in getting towns rebates for their assessments. But since the budgetary recession of the late 80s and early 1990s, MBTA bills have steadily grown throughout Hynes' district.

"I have tried to rid the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull from any MBTA assessment."
MARY JEANETTE MURRAY, STATE REPRESENTATIVE

In 1996, Hynes was appointed to the MBTA financing commission – a committee that he said has helped draw attention to the need to overhaul the T's budget structure which has been unchanged since the authority was established in 1964.

Under the current structure the MBTA's $950 million operating budget is funded in three ways — through assessments from 78 communities within the so called MBTA district ($141 million), from rider revenues ($155 million), and through state subsidy ($550 million).

The House plan calls for a more stable funding flow from state revenues. Under the proposal, 1 cent of the 5 cent state sales tax would be diverted to the transportation authority.

"The MBTA will now be asked to manage its budget based on a known funding stream," Hynes said.

As community assessments are gradually reduced over the next six years, the T will be encouraged to increase its fares to pick up the budgetary slack, Hynes said. Currently, MBTA fares cover a mere 16 percent of its overall operating budget. For public transit systems across the nation, fare boxes contribute far more to keep buses and trains running, Hynes noted.

Another funding change proposed by the House calls for the state to set the MBTA's budget prior to each fiscal year (forward funding), rather than reimbursing the T after the operation has taken place and the expenditures have been incurred, Hynes said.

"It's what every other agency and what everyone in private business has to do," he said.

For too long, Hynes said the MBTA has been "treated like an adolescent whose parents give him a credit card and then pay the bill." The new proposal will force the T to "act like an adult held accountable and responsible for its own spending."

But if the House plan is adopted, towns should not expect to see immediate savings. Hynes said under the current funding structure, communities are currently paying 1997 MBTA bills. Next year district-wide assessments will go up to $145 million and will stay at that level in the following year, he said.

Then beginning in the year 2002, assessments will drop every year through 2,006 when the level will be capped at $127.5 million. In Marshfield the bill will drop from a high of $520,394 next year to 132,667 in 2,006. In Scituate the assessment will drop from $390,295 to $99,840.

Other towns will see smaller reductions. For instance, Cohasset which has "The Ride," and is adjacent to Hingham where both the commuter boat and bus service run, will see the assessment reduced from $166,237 to $122,817 — a $43,420 savings.

Under the plan, communities with no transit service, and towns like Plymouth and Kingston that have just recently received service through the commuter rail, would pay the lowest assessments, Hynes said.

The House plan will go before the Senate next, and the issue will be discussed in conference committee early in July.

Hynes, who is "guardedly optimistic" the initiative will be approved, said the Senate has been "silent" on the issue and has not for the last several years been engaged in the process of bringing the T into a reasonable and sound budgetary system. House law makers intend to push hard for the legislation, he said.

While Senator Hedlund said he likes the House plan, he noted that the Senate will likely come up with a plan of its own.

"I can guarantee, the Senate plan will be different from the House plan," Hedlund said. Whatever proposal is adopted, Hedlund said he is confident that changing the T's funding structure will help the communities in his district that have been unfairly assessed for the last 35 years.

No help with foul balls

Selectmen took no action on a request from Peter Timothy, 32 Doane St., for a home-plate fence enclosure to protect his home and car from foul baseballs hit at the Beechwood ballpark.

"I have lived in the house since 1994," Timothy wrote. "I have had three broken windows and a broken car window during baseball games since we have lived in the house. We are now at the point that we cannot be in our yard, living room or two bedrooms, which face the park, while baseball games and practices are being played."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would cost $3,500 to extend the backstop behind home plate to first base — money he does not have in the budget.

Haddad said he was concerned that extending the fence might also create problems with those who wouldn't like the aesthetics of it.

"I would then be inundated with calls from people who don't like the way it looks," he said.

Timothy said in his letter that a foul baseball recently broke through his living room window. The couch, room and all the furnishings were covered with fragments of broken glass, creating a safety problem for his family.

Get connected with the Mariner on line

The Cohasset Mariner enters a new era this week by joining Community Newspaper Company's award-winning Town Online website.

The website at townonline.com/south includes all of the best elements of the Mariner, including breaking news, features celebrating all that makes the town unique, stories about issues relevant to the community as well as social news and more.

"This is an exciting venture and we will be reaching an entirely new audience," said Mark Skala, editor in chief for CNC/South. "Our interactive department and news folks have been working hard as a team to get our papers on line and the end result is something we can all be proud of."

The South Shore site is the first true online home for communities covered by all of CNC's papers, from Braintree to Kingston. The new site leads with a regional home page showcasing top South Shore news and features, a South Look lifestyle feature, a Web special report and regional arts. The regional home page is followed by individual town pages with the latest local news, opinion, community resources, interactive opportunities and advertising. The site also links to CNC's Community Connection, a program which offers free web sites to community non-profit groups.

Since its inception, Town Online has seen tremendous growth, and now hosts an archive of more than 100,000 pages of local news from a host of CNC newspapers. Town Online has been the recipient of numerous awards and honors in the online newspaper industry, especially for its commercial products.

"This is just one more step in our effort to be a complete media operations," said Bob Edelman, publisher of CNC/South. "We can now offer our advertisers multiple opportunities to get their message out to readers both in print and online."

Youth position eliminated

Recreation Director Jack Worley's request that some of the $15,000 salary for the youth resources coordinator position be reinstated did not pass muster with selectmen because of the budget situation. The funding was cut following the $766,000 April 10 failed override vote and will not be reinstated under any of the new, lower override scenarios.

In a letter to the board, Worley said not funding the position at all might be the difference between failure of the new teen center or having it fly.

"We know from past experience that the kids won't come to the center if parents volunteer to supervise," he said. "We need a young adult, 21-16 max. or we may be wasting our time and energy constructing the garage. There's probably no 21-26 year olds who can afford to volunteer their time."

Selectmen said in light of the budget, the position could not be restored this year.

AROUND TOWN

Cohasset "snow birds" Angie & Bill Kelly, Peg & Jim McCarthy and Nancy & Austin O'Toole.

SNOW BIRDS

Naples, Florida, is almost like a Cohasset annex — especially for "Cohasset Snow Birds." Jack and Ginnie Riley had a dinner party, and Angie and Bill Kelly, Peg McCarthy, Jim and Pat McCarthy, and Nancy and Austin O'Toole had a delicious time!

The O'Tooles invited 40 "snow birds" to not a "Travel Gate" or "Water Gate," but a "China Gate Party." All of the above were invited plus Paul and Mary Donovan, Irene and Jim Brown, Marge and Frank Libby, Maurine and Fred Thayer, Beverly and Howard Tinkham; also Winn and David Merrick, Mary and Ken Moore, Erica and Jerry Donovan, Kay and George Hanlon, Fran and John Howley, plus couples from Scituate and the Cape. A catered Chinese dinner was served, followed by a Chinese game of Stickers on your back and then trying to guess who or what your are related to in China..

Nancy reports it was "a great way to gather the strays from the North!"

WASHINGTON NEWS

Guess who was in "Roll Call Newspaper," the Capitol Hill paper while she was in Washington, D.C., for the Presidential Classroom? None other than our own Megan Connolly! And, guess whom she met! In case you don't recognize the handsome "hunk" pictured with Megan, it is John F. Kennedy! Don't some gals just have all the luck?! Most of us would give our eye-teeth to meet him, much less a photo!

NEW ARRIVAL

Jacqueline and Peter Vitello are in seventh heaven and their new little angel is the reason! On April 18, little Amanda Faith Vitello was born — and is she ever a beauty! She weighed 7 pounds three ounces, and has nice long legs (sounds like she'll be tall and slim like Mom). Amanda's maternal grandparents are Doris and the late Bob Goyette; her paternal grandparents are Mae and Joe Vitello of South Weymouth. Amanda is also one more reason everyone is hoping for wonderful weather for the Relay For Life, we know she will be there and can't wait to take a peek at her!

COLLEGE HONORS

Sarah Kirk received two honors during the senior Honors Weekend at the University of Vermont, held April 23-25. She was named Outstanding Senior in the religion department and was named to the sociology department's international honor society, Alpha Kappa Delta.

Sarah Kirk hopes to head to law school.

Sarah will receive her bachelor's degree in May with a double major in religion and sociology. She plans to go on to an internship in the Vermont State Justice system and then to law school. Sarah hopes to pursue a career in bioethics.

Sarah is the daughter of Rita and Jim Kirk of Cohasset, and is a graduate of the Cohasset Schools.

Megan Connolly and John F. Kennedy Jr. in Washington, DC.

WELCOME TO THE WORLD

Laura and Lee Stone are as happy as can be and the happiness is in the form of their baby girl Sophia Amelia Stone. Sophia was born March 28 at 7:24 p.m. She weighed 7 pounds 5 ounces and was 20 inches long. Sophia's maternal grandparents are Anne and Sam Evans of Hilton Head, S.C.; her paternal grandparents are Martha and Jay Ston[illegible] Chatham.

Congratulations to you all!

BREWSTER ACADEMY

News from Brewster Academy is that Stephen Kovach will graduate May 29 and will attend Hamilton College in the fall. Right now, Stephen is playing lacrosse and is the co-captain of the Brewster team!

COLLEGE ACCEPTANCE

Shawn Galvin, son of Pam and John Galvin, has been accepted to Massachusetts Bay Community College in Wellesley Hills for the fall 1999 semester. Congratulations, Shawn.

WEDDING DAY

The James family all came back to Cohasset last weekend. for a very happy occasion! Carla (daughter of Phil and Cindy James) was married at the Second Congregational Church May 1 — she became Mrs. Michael Allan Hill, a beautiful bride indeed! Philip's sister, Marcia (James) Carthus and her husband, Dick, came in from Minnesota for the event, as did Carla's brother, Brian.

Carla wore her mother's wedding gown (it was beautiful) and looked radiant! The day was beautiful, everyone had a grand time and the James family loved being back in Cohasset. And, we loved having them here, wish they'd all come this way more often!

RELAY FOR LIFE

Something easy and delicious

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Remember in the '50s and '60s the dish known as strata became popular? For those of you who don't, it is basically a savory bread pudding, consisting in the most part of bread layered with cheeses and meat, covered with a egg-milk custard, left to soak for several hours and then baked. Stratas are a convenient brunch or supper dish — a good one is a surprisingly easy and delicious meal. It's especially great when you'd rather not spend a lot of time in the kitchen the day of your brunch or supper!

This recipe is for Tomato and Cheese Strata — think of this as lasagna without the noodles! Hope you enjoy it!

Tomato and Cheese Strata

3 cups milk
1 day-old French loaf, sliced
Chunky Tomato sauce (recipe follows)
2 T chopped fresh thyme or 2 t dried, crumbled
2 T chopped fresh parsley
1-1/2 t chopped fresh rosemary or 1/3 t dried, crumbled
1 lb fresh mozzarella cheese, thinly sliced
1/2 lb Fontina cheese, thinly sliced
6 eggs, beaten to blend
1/3 c freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1-1/2 T. butter, cut into small pieces

Butter a 13x9 glass dish. Pour milk into large bowl. Working in batches, dip bread slices into milk just to soften, draining off excess milk. Arrange 9 slices in single layer in bottom of prepared dish. Spread 1 c tomato sauce over. Sprinkle with half of herbs. Arrange half of mozzarella and fontina slices over. Repeat layering with 9 bread slices, 1 c sauce, herbs and cheese. Top with remaining bread. Spread remaining sauce over. Pour eggs over casserole, piercing bread with tip of knife until eggs are absorbed. Sprinkle Parmesan over and dot with butter. Let stand 30 mins up to 8 hours. Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Bake strata until set and golden brown, about 45 minutes. Let stand 5 mins. Cut into squares and serve hot.

Chunky tomato sauce

1 T unsalted butter
1 T olive oil
1 medium onion, coarsely chopped
3 garlic cloves minced
3 lbs tomatoes, peeled, seeded, chopped (about 4 cups)
1 bay leaf
pinch dried thyme
2 T chopped fresh parsley

Melt butter with oil in heavy medium saucepan over medium heat. Add onion and sauté until wilted, about 5 mins. Add garlic and sauté 2 minutes Add tomatoes and herbs. Cook until sauce is reduced to chunky puree, stirring often about 20 mins. Discard bay leaf, season with salt and pepper. Add parsley. Makes 6 servings. This sauce is also good on chicken, fish and pasta.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Beware of strangers

When our kids are little we warn them about strangers — evil people who want to hurt them that might be lurking around the corner.

We recall a former neighbor from Switzerland whose children were the same ages as ours who commented on what a good word 'stranger' was.

"In German, we don't have such a good word as that," she said.

The message got through to our kids who knew never to accept candy, a ride or anything else from a stranger.

Most of us protect our children when they are young. We keep them close to us and don't let them out of our sight in public places. Thankfully incidents involving strangers are rare and most children grow up without having encountered one.

But those times are changing. Today the stranger is far more insidious and is welcomed into homes across America via an awesome new technological advancement — the Internet.

Just a few short years ago, we didn't even know what "surfing the Net" meant and had to have it explained to us. When our elder son went off to college in the fall of 1995, we didn't have e-mail — now e-mail is the main way we communicate.

Nowadays the Internet, e-mail and all that goes along it are an integral part of our lives. The growth of World Wide Web has been phenomenal and shows no signs of abating. Web sites are springing up for anything and everything. In fact, even your 20-year-old Cohasset Mariner, founded when Jimmy Carter was president, went "on-line" this week.

But along with the incredible communication and information explosion — we, as parents, still have to take responsibility to protect our children from the dark side of the medium.

There are literally thousands of inappropriate Web sites that contain matter that is bad for kids. If we've learned anything from the Columbine tragedy, it should be that young minds are malleable and vulnerable. Inappropriate rock lyrics and much of the stuff of R-rated movies pales in comparison to what a kid can find with a click of the mouse in just a few minutes on the Internet.

In fact, monitoring the Internet for dangerous sites and people is rapidly becoming part of a police officer's repertoire.

As parents, we need to take control. Ask your Internet provider for information on filtering services available that can eliminate the bad stuff. We should also monitor what our children are finding on the Internet and limit the amount of time they spend there.

Opening up the Internet to children without supervision could be worse than leaving your child unattended in a crowded amusement park.

Today our kids need to know that strangers come in all shapes and sizes and disguises and may be lurking no further away than in the computer screen.

Leadership is needed

TO THE EDITOR:

I voted against the April 3 $776,154 override in Cohasset for several reasons.

1. The School Committee did not negotiate the contract with teachers in good faith . . . there was no money to give raises in excess of 2.5 percent this year.

2. To date, the teachers' contract has never been made public. If voters are being asked to fund an additional step in the teachers' contract, then they should know the details of the teachers' contract.

3. Even if all three May 22 override questions fail at the upcoming election, the School Committee has stated that the teachers will get their raises and the students will be dealt with accordingly, cut supplies, cut custodial services and cut activities such as hockey. If this upcoming referendum were the Titanic, the teachers would have long ago left on the lifeboats while the students along with the town government side of the budget would be sinking with the ship.

Furthermore, I am disheartened that three members of the Board of Selectmen, Fred Koed, Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris would put three questions on the ballot, all of which, if voted, would impact severely on the town's side of the budget, which was balanced to begin with.

The first override of $776,154 was almost entirely the school's override, not the town's. Now the Selectmen are proposing to punish the town side of the budget by making them assume from 34 to 58 percent of the cuts depending on which override passes.

We need some leadership here.

Chapter 766 needs reform

TO THE EDITOR:

Reference: May 6, 1999 Mariner article "Just an (extra)ordinary 17-year-old girl."

I totally agree that Kara Johansen is an extraordinary girl and I respect the total commitment of Mr. Fred Johansen to those with special needs. As I have stated previously in the Cohasset Mariner, I agree that there is irrefutable evidence that special education programs are needed and positive results are indisputable.

Nevertheless, the standard of "maximum feasible benefit" as well as other problems with the current provisions of Chapter 766 are going to cause the program to topple of its own cost if reform isn't agreed upon soon. No viable program can escalate at five to seven times normal inflation indices and long endure. The $60 million recommended by Sen. Tolman won't even cover increased costs for the next fiscal year and doesn't come close to seeing the state defray 50 percent of programmatic costs.

Mr. Sindelar, a SPED advocate, is correct that SPED is a "civil rights" issue. Chapter 766 means that one-half of one percent of public school students in the nation are entitled to a higher level education than the other 99.5 percent. That one-half of one percent are the SPED students in the super liberal state of Massachusetts.

It's incredible that Selectman Callahan can characterize SPED as "a runaway train" and "budget monster," but not seek fundamental reform concurrent with increased funding.

A good start toward reconciliation would be Mr. Johansen's withdrawal of his pending litigation against the Cohasset School Committee as has been reported in the 1996, 1997 and 1998 Cohasset Town Reports.

Unity override still possible

TO THE EDITOR:

On the subject of the override vote, I want to take this opportunity to echo some of the things I've been saying at recent meetings.

I am not against any override. Certain fixed increases on both the town and school sides, together with limited new revenue and structural dilemmas, make level funding impossible. I simply disagree that a "maximum" override is prudent. At the moment, I support only the $380K override out of the three limited choices we have. Such an override keeps us on the path we have followed in recent years, at a prudent level of budget growth and on a prudent override cycle, given the current circumstances.

In addition to the specific items to stay or go in this year's budget, voters have to be cognizant of the fiscal consequences of each override option. The Town Manager's 5-yr. projections show that various levels of override yield various levels of future overrides, assuming that spending levels and habits continue as they are, and assuming a desire to continue the previous year's level of services. Absent a sea change in some opinions and as shown by our spending ac-

HEALTH NOTES

Decentralized wastewater management

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

On Monday, May 10, the Board of Health met to discuss with selected homeowners near Caravel cove off Nichols Road, the possibility of developing a town owned decentralized wastewater system. The system is envisioned as serving about 13 homes in the area which have marginal or failed septic systems. The board of health expects to be required to obtain a groundwater discharge permit for the system which will be of a size to treat abort 4000 gallons of effluent on a daily basis.

If the DEP approves of the plan, the town will apply for an interest free loan from the State Revolving fund for the cost of the system, and homeowners would be expected to pay for the system over 20 years.

Little Harbor Water Quality Study Begins.

On Wednesday May fifth, Camp Dresser McKee, the town's contractor, began the Little Harbor study, the purpose of which is to see if Little Harbor meets DEP water quality standards.

The contractor began the study with a sanitary evaluation of the periphery of Little Harbor win which possible sources on untreated effluents may be entering the water. The entire periphery of little harbor was inspected by the contractor assisted by 19 Cohasset High School students who participated as a part of their environmental science class assignment. Results of the survey will become available this summer in time to be used when water sampling begins. Any suspicious discharges will be sampled and analyzed when other water samples are collected from Little Harbor during the summer.

Relay for Life

Join the American Cancer Society's 24 Hour Relay for Life on May 22&23 from 3 p.m. to 3 p.m.

Relay teams representing corporations, local churches, hospitals and others will join the race to beat cancer. Team members will take turns at The High School's new Alumnae field walking or running around the track in order to keep one member of each team on the track throughout the 24 hours.

Teams camp out in tents and the relay becomes a happening, with runners partying among tents, etc.

The area will be lighted by Luminaria which may be bought by supporters for $5 each.

Rabies Alert

You may have heard about the children of a Cohasset family finding and bringing home a group of orphaned infant raccoons. It is a good idea to warn your children to avoid contact with such animals because of the threat of rabies.

April was Rabies Awareness Month. The rabies epidemic has been present in Massachusetts since 1992. Nearly all towns in Massachusetts are affected by this serious problem. Cases of rabies in animals have sharply increased in the past two years; we are currently in the second wave of the rabies epidemic.

At the State Laboratory Institute in 1998, 498 animals tested positive for rabies. Thirty-two animals have already tested positive for rabies in 1999. Last year, over 2,600 humans were exposed to rabid or potentially rabid animals. If these animals are not properly quarantined or tested, they pose a threat to citizens. An exposure to a rabid or potentially rabid animal can cost an individual over $2500 to receive rabies shots.

Health Fair a Success

Despite a small turnout, the health fair held last Thursday at the Second Congregational Church was a success, with over 60 people visiting the various exhibits. A healthy lunch was served to visitors who took advantage of an opportunity to receive cholesterol screening and a variety of other preventative procedures. The fair is sponsored every year by the Board of Health.

COHASSET CARES

Cohasset agrees to recycle everything

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff and issued periodically by the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Hello, Cohasset citizens! Welcome to our new format. The Cohasset Recycling Committee is an earnest group of Cohasset taxpayers who are volunteering to assist in the handling of our so-called trash, now one of the most important — because expensive — aspects of our lives today and of town governments everywhere. The purpose of this newsletter is to inform, to explain, to raise issues surrounding Cohasset's "trash" with the aim to achieve sensible, fair and economically responsible handling of that which is literally the substance of our lives.

Our immediate issue is this: the town's disposal costs are about to increase by $4.69 per ton [approximately $26,000] in FY 2000, requiring an increase in the recycling transfer facility sticker from $65 to $85, creating approximately $21,000 to help offset the deficit. We are sure that the average Cohasset taxpayer does not realize that the RTF sticker pays for only 30 percent of our trash disposal. Seventy per cent of the cost of our trash disposal comes out of our regular taxes.

Subsequent newsletters will deal with recycling committee chairman Arthur Lehr's receiving the Municipal Recycling Volunteer of the Year Award at the World Trade Center in Boston, which items bring in money for the town and which items we have to pay to have hauled away, the importance of cardboard, household hazardous waste collection, TV and computer recycling and disposal, used paint for recycling and reuse [swap], fluorescent tube disposal, paper vs. plastic bags, philosophical and psychological aspects of trash and recycling, of course composting, and, as they say, much, much more! See you next time.

tions of the past 2 years, such an assumption is not an unreasonable one to make.

Sure, unknown variables can upset the projections, but I suggest that it is disingenuous to state that spending choices made this year do not have serious ramifications down the line for spending and taxation levels, or that these unknown variables might instead substantially lessen those future impacts. I am concerned because the $766K would have resulted in general overrides in each of the next 4 years; the proposed $612K override, 3 out of the next 4 years; and the proposed $509K override, every other year. Our recent pattern has been general overrides every 3 years, and the proposed $380K override, or even a figure slightly higher, does that. I agree that Prop. 2 is unrealistic for Cohasset. That is why I at one point proposed a permanent "Prop 4 or 4 %" as a more realistic figure to deal with Cohasset's needs. Budget growth at this level was, in fact, what the Town Manager's budget projections back in January had called for. Such a rate also equates to our usual general override pattern. Such a rate assumes a roughly 3% annual increase on the town side of the budget and 6-7% on the school side, which is also where we've been in recent years. Prop. 2 , of course, can be ignored to any extent we wish via the override process.

However, both it and the magnitude of the recent override defeat stand for the proposition of some limits, like it or not. A future of near-permanent overrides, not only violates the spirit of 2 , but I also don't believe it to be sound fiscal policy for the Town. The current override debate also points out the need to discuss the structural problems of our budget and to begin to think about doing business differently. We are a 93-7 residential/commercial mix. We can tweak the ratio somewhat, but we are not going to change it substantially. We also have the basic structural problem that not enough is being done to fund local services, mainly education, by broader-based state and federal funding. Thus, we need to realize the limitations of being just a bedroom community in the present system of government financing and that it is not possible to be all things to all people at all times under that system. Perhaps that's gloomy, but I also don't believe it means that "quality" and "excellence" go down the drain.

I have tried to question how we do things and vocalize the many comments we all trade at cocktail parties and at the sports fields, but seem to be afraid to say when a dept. head or self-interest is sitting in front of us. I will continue to question assumptions and decisions, as should each of you in reviewing why certain items are targeted to be cut before others on both the town and school sides. It is because I think other less direct-impact items can be cut, which may happen to step on some toes however, that I can say I believe the sky won't fall in if the maximum override is defeated. I do not mean to say, however, that there are no consequences with my proposed vote. There are consequences whatever the vote is. That's why we should look for the best middle ground than cling to the absolutist extremes.

It has been suggested to me that I should "compromise" my position. I remind everyone that it takes two to tango. If anyone in the maximum override camp is willing to truly compromise, and find a figure, say in the $400s, between now and the May 17 Town Meeting, then I am prepared to go there, and to then present to the May 17 Town Meeting such a unified budget. Let's really see if we can all shed our absolutism for a few moments, for I think the town would support and embrace the "unity" override. Is a compromise off an override so close to the one already soundly defeated better than the risk of losing altogether?

The final (English) word on Monica

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Forgive me for what I am about to do . A friend of mine recently visited England and, knowing that I have a thing for them, brought me back some copies of a London newspaper, "The Weekly Telegraph," one of which contained an exclusive interview with — forgive me again now for it's the last time I'll say it — Monica Lewinsky.

Those of you who are fed up to here with the story of Monica and Bill (soon to be a major motion picture) can turn to something more important, like the truss ads, without penalty. You others, You others probably masochists mostly, can hang on for another 400 words, can't you?

The author of the Telegraph interview, one Jan Moir, tells of his first meeting with Monica, who was starting a whirlwind tour of Old Blighty to hustle her book, "Monica's Story," for three weeks in 19 European bookstores.

"Monica Lewinsky does not so much walk as thump across the floor with a curious leaden gate. She is a big woman with tiny feet, shod the day we meet in a pair of leopardskin loafers that she purchased two years ago in a Washington shop.

"'Real outfit makers and only $24.99,' she boasted.

"She seemed proud of her thriftiness and shows off a necklace that she made by stringing together fresh water pearls bought from a store.

"'Only $30. Pretty good, huh?' she says, slumping down in a chair."

We didn't see the real Monica, Moir feels, on that much ballyhooed TV appearance with Barbara Walters. when she was "slick and sensual. In the flesh she is vain and shallow."

"Television likes Monica, homing in, as it does, on her sensual mouth. But, in the flesh, she is rather unprepossessing and plain — her ankles are even thicker than Hillary's — with a brusk and bossy manner."

Monica feels Bill is more to blame for what happened than poor little she.

"He was the one being unfaithful," she told Moir. "I did not betray his wife and child. I was not the one who stood before God and made a vow to love, honour and cherish the other person. He is much more responsible for Chelsea and Mrs. Clinton's pain than I am."

"I had imagined," writes Moir, "that, following her television disclosures, she might be reluctant to talk further about President Clinton — mercy! — it is practically impossible to get her off the topic. Her face still brightens at his name and she is at her most animated when discussing him.

"Although she revels in the celebrity attention — she adored grandstanding her friends with tidbits about her presidential conquest — she has few shreds of mystique left. Now that we have finally heard her talk, we have discovered her unshakable belief that her sexuality is something that must be indulged whatever the cost."

"Sex is like eating," she told Moir. "Sometimes you eat because you are hungry; sometime you eat because you are emotional. Sometimes you have fast food and sometimes you eat a gourmet meal."

The unfortunate choice of metaphor aside, what do you bet the next edition of "Bartlett's Quotations" passes that one up?

Stop issuing platitudes

TO THE EDITOR:

For the last six years as an advisory board member, I have been questioning the school committee about discrepancies in their budgets and the lack of having an expenditures column as do the rest of the town departments. Their response has been to either ignore my inquiries or provide the proverbial runaround. To this date they have still refused to change the format of their budget even though former school committee member Joe McElroy volunteered and the town accountant offered his time to set it up in their computers.

When Rick Shea was elected to the school committee three years ago he pledged to straighten out the budget mess. Kathy Ofsthun, with her CPA background, reiterated that promise when she joined the board two years ago.

Nothing has changed. One perfect example occurred at the joint selectmen-school committee-advisory board on April 20. I handed Kathy the bus fuel expenditures for FY '98 according to the town accountant's records which indicated that only $12,500 was spent in fuel; yet the school insists on carrying a much larger number in their budget. At the following school committee meeting, Kathy made a public announcement that according to the school's figures, $18,500 was actually spent on fuel and the committee carried too low a number for their current budget.

If Kathy did her job and investigated she would have discovered that the town accountant has the right figures and the excess $6,000 that the school business office listed in that account was for unrelated expenses that should have been under another account.

This is just the latest example of the lack of knowledge that the school committee has when it comes to their budget and their inability to discover the truth and correct inaccuracies.

It has been seven weeks since the town meeting and the school committee has yet to present to any other board in town the teachers contract or even its financial impact on their budget over the next three years. Some selectmen have been suggesting since the fiscal crisis was discovered that the school committee seriously consider renegotiating some terms of the teachers contract, especially the new added step that has a higher increase than the previous ones. The school committee has outright refused stating that it is impossible.

At the May 10 informational meeting, it was disclosed that the teachers contract has not been signed by the teachers and that it is still open so that the teachers can still make any changes that they want.

It is time that the school committee stop issuing platitudes and realize they are a body obligated to represent all of the taxpayers not just the parents of the children in the school.

Return to fiscal responsibility

TO THE EDITOR:

Due to the vital nature of providing accurate information to the voters prior to the town meeting scheduled for May 17 and its potential continuation on May 24, and the override election on May 22, I feel I must address a misstatement that was made at the Selectmenís meeting on May 11.

It was stated by a selectman that any senior (age 65 or over) could defer payment of his or her real estate taxes regardless of income until his or her death or transfer of title to the real estate. That statement was not correct.

While this deferment for seniors is something I know we all support and qualifying seniors should avail themselves of this opportunity, it does, in fact, have a maximum income level of $40,000 per year to qualify.

Huge overrides have a negative and devastating impact on our seniors and residents at lower income levels. It is the responsibility of our elected and appointed officials to return sanity to the budget. Disagreement over spending does not indicate abandonment of our children, but rather a plea for return to some fiscal responsibility.

Tone is disturbing

TO THE EDITOR:

I have been a Cohasset resident for 49 years and the tone from the school proponents offends me. It is disturbing to read negative letters in newspapers from people who have recently moved to town. Their attacks on longtime residents who have been working tirelessly without any compensation to bring some sense of accountability to our town, are unwarranted.

When I see state police and dogs in our school like they were last week due to threats of violence, I wonder where the children learn this type of behavior.

I would like Cohasset to return to the caring community that it was before this pro school group split it apart. We don't need short term people who move in, get us riled up even though they are unfamiliar with the issues, and have our taxes raised for only the schools before they move on.

We have the other side of town government that takes care of our everyday needs and has been staying within the yearly tax increase automatically allotted. Besides the police, fire, harbormaster, council on aging, and town hall workers, a small group of dedicated DPW workers, with salaries not to be envied, are the backbone of this community. They have maintained Cohasset and kept it the beautiful town that we all love. Without their work, Cohasset would not be featured in so many commercials and movies.

The town side has been willing to abide within budget guidelines without an uproar. The schools seem to have forgotten that they are a part of the same budget constraints as the rest of the town.

School threat under investigation

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The school department is continuing to investigate an April 26 incident when someone wrote "May 6 you will die" in the boys' lavatory wall at the middle school.

Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the school department is working with Cohasset police in the investigation.

Chief Brian Noonan said the incident "was kept as low key as possible."

"We met with school officials and came up with a plan for the entire week," he said. "It was very effective, there were no problems."

School systems across the country are taking threats and incidents of this type very seriously in light of the April 20 Columbine High School tragedy in Colorado.

Noonan said both uniformed and plain-clothes officers were in the school last week and were well accepted by the students. The state police canine units and bomb squads also swept the building and found nothing.

"Although it may have been somewhat of an overreaction, it made people feel better about sending their kids to school the next day," Noonan said about state police involvement.

Nevertheless, about 25 percent of the student body stayed home last Thursday.

"We met with school officials and came up with a plan for the entire week. It was very effective, there were no problems."

— Police Chief Brian Noonan

Malvey said in addition to police details, monitors were assigned and other security measures were implemented throughout the building.

"We continue to emphasize that this was an isolated incident anonymously written, yet we will not hesitate to involve the police now or in the future," he said in a prepared statement on May 6.

"We hope parents will understand the circumstances surrounding such unfortunate incidents, and rest assured that all appropriate steps have been taken to ensure school safety, and realize that there is no need to have students absent from school."

Malvey's comments followed a May 4 letter sent home to all parents from middle-high school Principal Curtis Collins.

Collins said although the "inappropriate" writing probably constituted a prank, the school did not take it lightly.

"For a good while, at least, many new procedures and policies will be in effect at our school; each of these practices contributes to the much increased security of our facility — both internally and externally," Collins said in the letter. He did not go into detail about the new policies.

Noonan said all threats will be taken seriously.

"Under the circumstances the increased security was warranted," Noonan said. "We are not going to allow the opportunity for something to happen here."

CHS senior Megan Connolly, who serves as student liaison to the committee, told the school committee last week that May 6 was as "normal a day as it possibly could be."

Malvey said if the perpetrator is found, the "full force of the law will come to bear."

"It is safe to say we have zero tolerance," he said.

Malvey said the school was inundated with calls from the media all week in addition to calls from concerned parents. He praised students, administrators and staff for their support during a difficult time.

"Our main message is education," he said. "Let's get past it and get our house in order."

COHASSET WEEK

School board to spotlight issues

School Committee Chairman Mark DeGiacomo plans to set aside up to an hour at each school committee meeting to focus on particular policy issues or other matters.

He asked his fellow board members to get back to him with ideas. Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey will coordinate with administrators and faculty on the various issues so the background, history and thought can be presented.

An example of a topic is the upcoming school choice vote which could open Cohasset doors to students from other towns. Before the school committee takes a vote as required by state law by June 1, members want a full airing of the issue.

"Our most experienced member of the board is Kathy (Ofsthun) who has a full two years behind her," DeGiacomo said. "To get a full picture, I'd like to set aside an hour at each meeting to spotlight a particular issue."

DeGiacomo said time would be set aside starting at 8 p.m. Interested citizens can call ahead to the superintendent's office at 383-6111 to find out what the topic under discussion will be for the next meeting.

Call-in cable show on budget

Former local talk show host Wigmore Pierson will be in front of the camera again tonight to help moderate a call-in show on the budget, upcoming town meetings and override vote. He will be joined by Nan Roth, a former selectman and chairman of the advisory committee.

Roth said the show will air live from 7:30 to 9 p.m. on Channel 3 from the selectmen's office in town hall.. It will be replayed, she said.

Guests include Town Manager Mark Haddad, school committee member Kathy Ofsthun, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown and school Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey.

Citizens are welcome to join the studio audience. Questions will be taken from the floor and by telephone, Roth said. The call-in number is 383-4105.

Selectmen still split on what budget number to back

2-1/2 percent in a given year without a positive override vote at the polls. Sixty percent of those who voted said no to the override on April 10. The defeat sent town officials scrambling for a game plan that voters would support.

Needless to say, after a series of meetings officials could not agree on a single figure, so selectmen decided to put three overrides before the voters: $612,895; $509,554; and $380,000 at the upcoming May 22 special election.

At their meeting this week, selectmen tried to reach agreement on presenting a unified front for one of the numbers. No such luck.

Selectman Diane Sullivan was the most vocal member for no override at all. And at the other end of the table — and the political spectrum — sat Selectman Ronnie McMorris who argued passionately for the highest figure.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Tom Callahan fell somewhere imbetween. Selectman Fred Koed backed the highest figure because he doesn't want to see the cuts but also said agreed with Callahan that some compromise was needed.

Callahan said the $612,895 figure was too close to the $766,000 number defeated April 10.

"Of the three choices, $380,000 is my number at the moment," he said.

Accusing the schools of not cooperating on the issues, Sullivan said none of the numbers were palatable to her.

"I'm looking at a straight across no," she said. "Then the dialog will begin. I cannot let someone suffer on their tax burden without any give 'n take. I saw no give 'n take," she said referring to the school committee.

That prompted advisory committee member Maureen Jerz, a former school committee member, to challenge Sullivan's reasoning because she had previously supported a budget proposed by Town Manager Mark Haddad that would require a $500,000 override.

"You're peeved, so you're going to vote no on everything," Jerz said. "You're going to take your ball and go home. I'm not sure that's leadership."

At one point Callahan suggested that all town officials give up their stipends amounting to a total of about $15,000. That drew fire from Koed who pointed out that the election workers who often work from 7 a.m. until 11 p.m. for $5 an hour might not "volunteer."

"It's just a token of appreciation," he said about the stipend.

Callahan also suggested the school committee renegotiate the teacher's contract eliminating the new 14th step for teachers with the most seniority. He described the raise as "superfluous." But saying the contract was negotiated in good faith, the school committee has adamantly refused to reconsider the controversial step increase, which will cost taxpayers about $54,000.

McMorris said she did not think the message has been clear about what services are going to be lost if the overrides fail.

"My personal feeling is I supported the $766,000 override because I believed it was what we needed to maintain the current level of services," she said. McMorris.

In a 3-1-1 vote — with Callahan abstaining and Sullivan voting no — selectmen voted to back the $509,554 figure at Monday's town meeting.

Confusing matters more, Callahan said he hoped a figure between the $380,000 and $509,554 could be agreed upon at town meeting. If that occurred, voters would still have to pass the $509,554 override but town meeting would not have to appropriate the entire amount.

If none of the overrides passes, the taxes on the so-called average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 would increase $133 in fiscal year 2000, which begins July 1. A tax rate of $15.34 per $1,000 of assessed valuation is needed to cover the town's operating budget without an override.

With a $380,000 override, the tax rate would be $15.74; with a $509,554 override, the tax rate would be $15.88 and with a $612,895, the tax rate would be $15.99.

Taking sea glass by Storm

Broken objects become works of art

By Frank DiCesare
STAFF WRITER

For most people, glass shards on the beach conjure memories of cut toes stinging in the salty sand. But with Mother Nature's help, Kieli Storm turns broken glass into works of art.

A young woman with an artistic and entrepreneurial mind, Storm, 27, is a jeweler from Cohasset who incorporates sea glass — glass shards softened overtime by salt water and sand — into necklaces, bracelets, rings and a host of trinkets. A hobby which has evolved into a business, Storm now owns and operates SilverStorm & Co.

"My mother is the recycle queen," Storm said. "She thinks it's great that I'm helping the environment and making money at the same time."

While vacationing with her boyfriend in the British Virgin Islands in 1996, Storm's business was born. As the couple strolled along a Virgin Gorda beach one afternoon, Storm made her boyfriend a necklace from which a sea glass pendant hung. Two years later, Storm began bringing her art and jewelry to shows including Cohasset's Festival on the Common, sponsored by the South Shore Arts Center.

"That show was wildly successful," Storm said. "I think it's because people around here are into nautical things."

Storm said she participates in five to seven art shows a year where she displays and sells her work including the Festival on the Common in Cohasset next month.

Organizing Silver Storm & Co. last year, Storm dabbled in various kinds of nautical items including c-shaped, colorful shells but none had the potential to be marketed as a production line, she said. Her sea glass jewelry, however, was different.

"I wanted a production line where each piece was one of a kind," Storm said. "Each piece of sea glass is naturally one of a kind so I decided to start a sea glass jewelry line."

A 1996 Massachusetts College of Art graduate where she majored in metals, Storm also sells silver martini sticks and baby spoons both of which have been huge successes. Her work is done primarily out of her 20 by 20 studio in Ellis house on Country Way in Scituate and in Boston.

"I love it here," she said. "It's real easy for me to get too secluded in my work. But there are other artists living here working with me. It keeps the creative spirit alive."

Storm's sea glass jewelry line, martini sticks and baby spoons are marketed via postcards which satisfied customers have mailed as far south as Florida and as far west as California.

In addition to mail orders and sales at her Cohasset store, Storm also takes special orders from customers who have a particular piece of jewelry in mind.

"They give me an idea for an object and I make it within my artistic style," she said. "A lot of jewelers shy away from special orders because they have to work with someone else's idea. Sometimes the customer's idea may not suit [the jeweler's] artistic taste."

But taking special orders from customers is a good way for her to build her line, she said. A customer's idea might provide her with insight into what the public's tastes are. It was through a special order that Storm got the idea for her martini sticks.

Surviving as an artist is not easy. Storm said artists have wonderful ideas and talents which, unfortunately, are not enough to sustain them.

"The toughest part about being an artist is that you have to be a business person as well," said Storm. "You can have great ideas but you need to know how to sell them."

Although her first year in business was tough, Storm said this year is looking better.

"As long as there's glass on the beach, I'll be making jewelry," she said.

Storm's jewelry and merchandise can be purchased via mail at SilverStorm & Co., P.O. Box 53, Cohasset, MA 02025. Phone orders can be made at (617) 571-0103.

HOW MUCH OF YOUR HOME COMPUTER CAPACITY IS BEING WASTED?

Oh sure, you've got a nice computer. Maybe two or three or more. With a jillion giga-whatsis and scads of mega-stuff.

But are you getting all you paid for out of your home computer system?

Can your computers talk with each other, for example? Can they all access the same printers? Can more than one user interface with your MediaOne Express line?

Is your computer able to control the lighting or heating and air conditioning in your home? The security system? The call answering system? Can you watch what's happening in your home while you're away?

Now, it's all possible. Resi-Net can make it happen.

Resi-Net is the first company of its kind — specialists in residential and home-based business computer systems. Networking. Configuring. Home automation. Security. Web blocking. And more.

Why waste another byte? Call Resi-Net today. With any service you order, we'll give you a free Y2K hardware test on all your home computers.

Health Awareness Day held

Clockwise:John Campbell has his blood pressure checked by Peg Carroll, RN, of the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association. Free health screenings were offered throughout the day. Genevieve Good happily offers her finger for a cholesterol test at last week's Health and Wellness Fair sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and the board of health. Yvette Rattenbury gives Joanne Ilacqua a Reiki massage. Rattenbury and Ilacqua discussed and demonstrated the benefits of relaxation and massage. The annual event was held at the Second Congregational Church. Therapist Donna Audette of Adamo Day Spa Retreat in Cohasset gives Charlotte Leland a theraputic massage that reduces stress and increases circulation.

IT'S HAPPENING

ASP car wash

Saturday, May 15, the Cohasset Appalachia service project (now preparing for its 12th trip) is having its first of three car washes in front of the Second Congregational Church (next to town hall) from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. Cohasset ASP is a group of teenagers and adults (134 this year) who travel to Appalachia to take part in a week- long home-repair project.

Please come and support our efforts! Remaining car washes will be May 22 and June 5.

Beechwood yard sale

A yard sale benefiting the Beechwood Church will be held on Saturday, May 15, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 432 First Parish Road, Scituate.

Shop early for furniture, household items, toys, tools, books and baby items.

Call 781-383-0808, if you would like to donate items or would like more information.

Harborfest band to play in Memorial Day parade

Cohasset's own adult marching band will play in the 1999 Memorial Day parade, scheduled for May 31. The band will march and play three songs, and will join the Deer Hill School Band in "The Star Spangled Banner."

This past winter and spring the Harborfest Band has been practicing regularly under the direction of Steve Biagini, director of instrumental music at Deer Hill School. New members are welcome to join at any time. The band will next rehearse Monday, May 24, for the parade.

The Harborfest Band was formed in 1995 at the suggestion of the late Edward T. Atkinson, minister of First Parish, who thought it would be fun for adults to have a chance to once again be in a marching band. Since that year, the band has grown from a dozen or so members to a roster of 35-40 high school and adult musicians, some of whom, until the band was formed, had not played their marching band instruments in several years (35 years in one case). The band has played at each Harborfest parade since 1995 and most recently at the Christmas tree-lighting ceremony in December, 1998.

The band welcomes new members, high school age and up. Call Steve Biagini, c/o Deer Hill School (383-6115) or StevenB903@aol.com or Betts Murray (383-9444), Bbetts220@aol.com for further details.

Dramatic Club musical

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents the musical "Anne of Green Gables" at the Cohasset Town Hall weekends through May 16. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Front Street Books in Scituate or reserved by phone at (781) 545-5499.

Social service league annual meeting

The Social Service League of Cohasset, Inc., will conduct its annual meeting and election of officers on Thursday, May 13, at Walton Rodgers' Hall at St. Stephen's Church. A luncheon and program featuring Hingham Symphony's String Quartet, conducted by Jin Kim, will follow the meeting.

Glastonbury Abbey plant sale

Saturday, May 15, 8:30 a.m. to noon, a large selection of plants will be found for sale on the grounds of Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St.

Perennials, ground cover, herbs, ornamental grasses and bushes will be on sale. Plants are all being donated from local private gardens in the Hingham-Cohasset area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in the Abbey gardens.

Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners at the seventh annual plant sale.

Proceeds will be donated to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury and used to continue beautification of the Abbey grounds. Please join for some great plant bargains.

Curtain rises for 'Guys and Dolls' this weekend

Hingham Civic Music Theatre (HCMT) will present Frank Loesser's popular musical "Guys and Dolls" May 14, 15, 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. and May 23 at 2 p.m. at the new Hingham Civic Center's Sanborn Auditorium. For tickets or more information, call Faye O'Brien at (781) 749-0857.

"Guys and Dolls" is being directed by Debbie Rawson of Braintree. Musical direction is provided by John Duff of Quincy and choreography by Tina Combs-Fabrizio of Whitman. "Guys and Dolls" boasts a large cast that features many residents of Hingham and other South Shore communities.

Hingham residents Joel Leonard and Kathy Campbell are featured as Big Jule and General Cartwright.

Originally performed on Broadway in 1950 starring Vivian Blaine, the 1955 hit movie version also starred Frank Sinatra and Marlon Brando. The smash 1992 Broadway revival won three Tony awards.

"Guys and Dolls," a favorite of many theatre lovers, is the first to be staged at HCMT's new home, the renovated Hingham Civic Center's Sanborn Auditorium, 220 Central St. in Hingham.

Pre-sale tickets are $12 and may be purchased by calling Faye O'Brien at (781) 749-0857 or by visiting Corson's Glass House on Route 53 in Hingham or Olden's Pharmacy in South Weymouth. Group discounts available. All tickets sold at the door will be $14.

Skippers remain on top of SSL

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset High girls tennis coach Sara Meehan was nervous as the season approached. After benefiting from being able to use seventh and eighth graders, Meehan was forced to go without them as the middle school formed its own program.

"We have a very small group," said Meehan. "The most I've had is 24. We only have 11 girls this year."

Although the quantity may be down, the quality is still there as the Skippers have jumped out to a 7-0 start after Tuesday's 4-1 win over Norwell..

"That was a very tight match," said Meehan. "The score was deceiving. Norwell has been by far our toughest competition. That was a really tough match."

Cohasset is strong from top to bottom.

"We have a lot of depth," said Meehan. "It's been an interesting year. I've been moving some of the girls around. We have three seniors that are undefeated."

Katie Brister is unbeaten at second singles, while Jessica Stevens and Katie Devine are also unbeaten at first doubles.

"The first time we defeated Norwell it was 3-2, and the first doubles went three sets," said Meehan. "That came down to the wire. They are incredibly aggressive. Katie is the fourth of the Brister sisters that have played and could easily play first singles in other programs."

Junior Kate Stone serves as a fourth captain, along with the three seniors, and plays first singles.

"She doesn't have a great record, but she's played against some tough competition," said Meehan. "In the past she's been conservative, but this

Girls lax steps up

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

In just its fourth year of existence, the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team is looking to make strides that won't necessarily show up in the win column.

While at times overmatched by more established programs, the Skippers have continued to progress. Tuesday Cohasset faced an equally inexperienced Nantucket squad and came away with a satisfying 13-8 home win.

"The girls did a nice job of moving the ball around," said Cohasset coach Kate Brady. "They really did a nice job of adjusting to what Nantucket was trying to do."

Cohasset only led 8-6 at the half but managed to pull away in the second half by playing tight defense and keeping the ball in the Nantucket end most of the time.

Jenny Chastain was the high scorer with six goals, followed by Meghan Connolly, who actually started in goal and then scored twice in the second half. Other scorers were Kristin Sheerin, Jackie Kahn and Caitlin Stansell, who also was solid defensively.

Attack wings Kate Bosworth, Kate Grimm and Becky Ross played well, along with Maggie O'Neil, Caitlin O'Neil, Emily Libby and Maggie O'Connor. Freshman Suzi Lynner got her first start at center and did well.

Playing well off the bench and providing strong back-up were Carolyn Cameron, Carlie Carter, Kelly Devine, and Andi Shaughnessy. Clara Sceery made her debut in goal in the second half and made some nice saves.

"They're good kids," said Brady, whose squad is now 3-5 on the season. "They work hard everyday."

Cohasset will host Marshfield today. On Friday, the girls will participate in "Lacrosse Spirit Day". The middle school will have a game at 3:15, followed by the varsity girls at 5 p.m. and the varsity boys at 7 p.m. There will be a food court from 3:30 p.m. on.

Junior lacrosse teams have Mother's Day rebound

After several disappointing losses, the Cohasset Under-12 Lacrosse program righted itself on Mother's Day, with two hard-fought home games that resulted in a win and a narrow defeat.

While both Cohasset Blue and White opened the season with wins, they proceeded to lose their next few games by wide and discouraging margins.

In fact, the Falmouth 1 team that came to play Cohasset White on May 9 had beaten Cohasset Blue by six goals a week earlier. This time, however, the story was a little different.

Goalie Chris Simms picked up 11 first-half saves to keep Falmouth from running out to a big lead. Two goals by Aidan Buick and one by Toffer Noering kept Cohasset in it, and the game went to the half with the locals trailing 4-3. Jake Previte knotted the game at 4-4 early in the third quarter, but Falmouth came right back to head into the final period with a two-goal lead.

Jonathan Littauer scored less than 20 seconds into the final period, and Previte got his second goal of the game less than 40 seconds later, to tie the game again at 6-6. Falmouth came back with a quick goal, only to have Previte score again.

Neither team scored down the stretch, until Falmouth broke through with just over a minute to play. But Cohasset kept its composure, regained the ball and controlled play, narrowly missing a shot with 17 seconds to play before Previte broke free for his fourth goal of the game with just six seconds left in the game.

Simms, playing his best game of the season in net, finished with 18 saves.

Cohasset Blue had the second game of the day, and got off to a fast start against Barnstable, with Jon Grimm and Chris Barber scoring goals in the first two minutes of play.

But Barnstable controlled the rest of the half, recovering and then getting out to a 4-2 lead early in the third quarter.

Trevor Brady then brought Cohasset back with two goals heading into the fourth period.

Barnstable got a quick goal and appeared ready to pull away, but Mike Barnes—who finished with 12 saves—made several point-blank stops to keep Cohasset in it. Then, after a Barnes save, Zach Markert took the ball end to end, tying the game at 5 with four minutes left to play.

After two minutes of scoreless play in which Cohasset controlled the ball but could not score, Barnstable broke free, breaking the tie and then scoring a late insurance goal for a 7-5 victory.

"The final scores may not show it, but this was the best that both teams played all season," said Chuck Jaffe, who coaches both Cohasset youth teams. "In the games we have lost, we have not put up much fight once we fell behind by more than a goal. "Today, we played with determination and heart. The result was two exciting, fun games. The only thing that would have made it better was two wins."

Cohasset White is now 1-3-1, while Cohasset Blue fell to 1-3. Both teams are in action again this week, with the Blue squad playing Marshfield Friday at Deer Hill School and then traveling to Sandwich on Sunday. Cohasset White plays at Barnstable on Sunday.

Lacrosse Spirit Day

Mark Friday May 14 on your calendar. There will be a Lacrosse Spirit Day at Alumni Field with fun for everyone. The girl's and boy's teams will all play from 3 until the under-the-lights game for the varsity boy's at 7 p.m. The Lacrosse Boosters will have a food court for dinner. Lacrosse alumni are invited as our guests, and there will be clinics between games. Come cheer on our talented athletes. We hope that you can join in the fun!

Brooks elected to Northeastern Hall of Fame

Richard E. T. Brooks, a resident of Cohasset, has been elected to the Northeastern Hall of Fame for his achievement in the sport of basketball and his long-standing commitment to the university.

Brooks, along with seven other honorees, will be officially inducted in a formal ceremony on Friday, May 21, 1999, at Northeastern's Matthews Arena.

A 1957 graduate, Brooks was one of New England's premier basketball players in the seasons of 1954-55 and 1955-56. As the team's starting center his junior year, he had the honor of participating in the first tip-off at the newly constructed Northeastern gym (later named Cabot Gym) on December 4, 1954.

That season, under the tutelage of basketball coach Joe Zabilski, Brooks scored 313 points for a 15-point average and became the defensive anchor of the NU five. He also put his 6'6 frame to good use, becoming the team's top rebounder. That distinction was evident in a 66-60 upset over Springfield as Brooks set an NU record with 21 boards, a mark that remained untouched for another decade.

In his senior season Brooks was elected team captain. The highlight of his final campaign was a 62-51 upset of local powerhouse Boston College. The key to the game came when BC's star player fouled out after registering his fifth straight charging call trying to drive by Brooks.

With his defensive prowess and standout offensive skills, Brooks became the master of the double-double, a phrase that wouldn't become commonplace for decades. He finished the season with 318 points, maintaining his average of 15 per game, while also keeping up his reputation as one of the region's strongest performers on the boards.

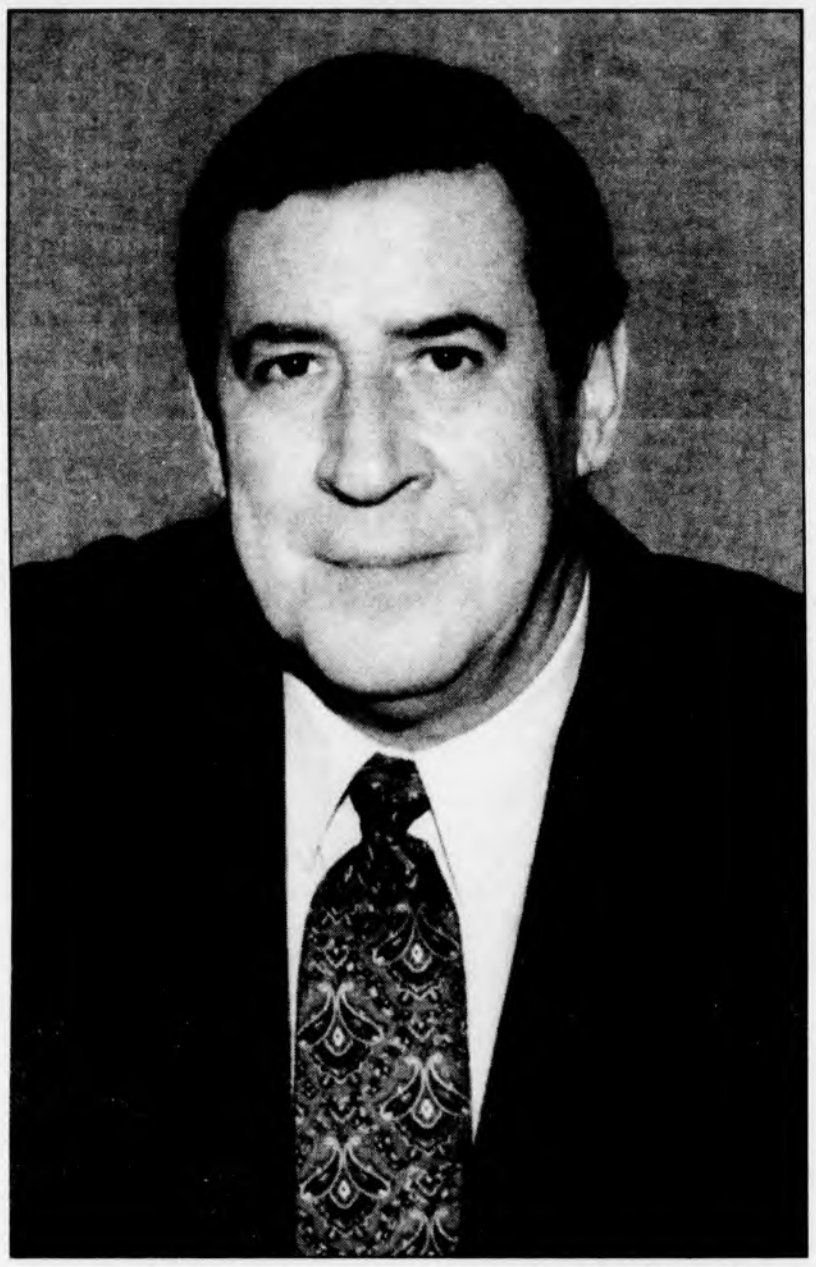
Though rebounding was a seldom-kept statistic in the '50s, Brooks would have consistently recorded double-figure totals.

His college basketball career ended with honors and opportunities. Brooks was selected to play in the first New England College all-star game and was the contest's second-highest scorer, netting 11 points. In the fall of 1956 he was invited to try out for the Boston Celtics with other rookies like Bill Russell, Tom Heinsohn, Sam Jones, and K. C. Jones. After a week he took Coach Red Auerbach's advice: "Forget about the NBA and go for the MBA."

Brooks' academic career managed to outshine his athletic achievements. He maintained Dean's List honors in every quarter and graduated with the top award for a Northeastern senior, the Alcott Memorial Award for All-Around Excellence.

His subsequent business career has been meteoric. After serving for two decades as a top executive at Polaroid he founded Chem Design in 1982 and turned it into a $100 million-a-year corporation.

He currently resides with his wife Linda in the couple's new home in Cohasset.



Cohasset resident Richard Brooks will be inducted into the NU Hall of Fame on Friday, May 21.

year she's been going all out to get to the next level and now she's really starting to shine through. She's had some incredible matches. She had one opponent that was ranked 14th in New England."

There is also a group of underclassmen that have rotated between second doubles and third singles. They are Jessica Niessink, Jessie Zerendow, Ari Afshar, Kelly Stone, Marcina Boone, Jen Meehan and Samantha Mortland.

"It's been good because the kids can play both singles and doubles, which is what they have to do in college," said Meehan. "They've learned how to work together."

With only three league matches left in the regular season, Meehan has scheduled a pair of matches against Scituate to prepare for the tournament, at team Meehan has yet to beat in her coaching career.

"Last year I didn't think we were quite ready for the tournament," said Meehan. "We still did all right. We made it to the semifinals but lost 3-2 to Dover-Sherborn, Nobody prepared us last year. We should be ready this year.

Busy weekend for road races

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

While several teams decided to skip Saturday's Girls State Coaches meet at Plymouth South because of this week's league meets, it's obvious the Scituate High girls track team is going to be ready for the stretch run.

The Lady Sailors received strong performances from Kristen Dummer in the 100-meter hurdles and Aquila Judge in the 300-meter hurdles. Dummer finished a solid fourth with her time of 16.05, while Judge pushed Apponequet's Beth Smith to the wire over the longer hurdle race. Smith outlasted the Scituate freshman, 45.72 to 46.33.

With the State Class meet slated for May 29 and the All-State championships a week later, the Lady Sailors will be fine-tuning their speed workouts under head coach Bill Smith and assistant Charles Leverone. Look for the Scitatue girls to be a big factor in the final weeks of the season.

The Silver Lake girls should also come through with some good outings as well. Heidi Anderson finished well in the pole vault last Saturday. Anderson cleared 7 feet, 6 inches for fifth overall while the mile-relay team was a close second to Hopkinton with a fine 4:11.3. When you have a high-school relay team averaging 65.3 per 400, there aren't going to be too many teams finishing in front of you.

Hingham's Tim Tobin was the easy winner in the 60-and-over division of Saturday's Sixth Annual Scituate Fire Local 1464 Benefit Road Race 5K. Tobin, who finished 33rd overall in the field of 410 runners, averaged impressive 7:02 miles to cross the finish line in 21:49. Tobin dominated the division with a whopping 2:43 cushion over second-place finisher Charles Grainger of East Bridgewater.

The overall winners, John Noland of Kingston and Holly Wanta of Scituate, aren't exactly unfamiliar names on the South Shore. Both are consistent winners in local road races and had exceptional high-school cross country careers.

Noland who attended Marshfield High School was a Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic, as was Wanta, a Hanover High graduate.

Tobin was only one of several Hingham runners who fared well in the age-group categories. Leila Walden was the 50-59 division champ with a 23:55 performance; Laurie Buttkus was 13th overall and second in the 40-49 division with her 23:32; and Amy Wojasinski raced to a third-place, 25:00 showing in the 19-29 division.

It will be a busy weekend on the roads with several races within an hour of the South Shore.

On Saturday, the Sixth Annual St. Catherine's Spring Road Race will be held in Norwood. For more information on the 5 mile and 5K, call (781) 769-5649. The Healthpoint 5K Road Race is also on tap in Waltham. Information is available by calling (978) 774-3842.

Sunday's offerings include the 11th Annual Striar JCC Road Races/Race Walk in Stoughton. Call (781) 297-7280 for the lowdown on the 10K and 5K runs and 5K walk. There should be a strong turnout for the Rocky Marciano Run in Brockton. Call (508) 583-1039.

The hugely popular 12th Strawberry Shortcake Road Race/Fun Run in Plympton will be held on May 22. The race is 10K in distance with the fun run covering 2 miles. Call (781) 585-9926.

For updates on all upcoming races take a gander at the New England Runner website at http//www.runningnetwork.com/NERunner.

(Fax your comments, track and road race results, and story ideas to Joe Reardon at (781) 741-2931 or call (781) 340-1006.)

Boys lacrosse looks for strong finish

After a convincing preseason win against Martha's Vineyard, the Cohasset High lacrosse team moved into its conference schedule with enthusiasm and a triumph over Catholic Memorial.

The talented coaching of Paul Sporn was evident as the team executed plays skillfully in the CM game. They matched up well physically against Barnstable with the Skipper defense playing a strong game.

Senior Co-captain Jamie DeMichele made several full-length runs with his big stick, including one for a goal. Junior co-captain and goalie Kevin DeVito repelled many a Barnstable attack ably, backed up by freshman Kyle Weber on man-up situations.

Freshmen Jason Moore and Paul Previte saw a good deal of action scoring a goal apiece and playing a fine game.

In the New Bedford game the Skippers made a strong showing from start to finish, with a commanding midfield performance by senior Jake Motley, and valuable contributions by freshmen Pete Whorisky and sophomore Justin Langham defensively.

With a controlled passing game and a strong defensive presence, Cohasset defeated Norwell. DeMichele and sophomore Ronan Buick played like all-stars.

Fellow sophomore Brad Powell and his strongest varsity game to date. De Vito backed up the "D" with his usual stellar show. Junior Travis Moore and freshman Peter Kovach contributed goals for the win.

The team suffered a setback at the hands of a very tough Falmouth squad that was, like the Skippers, undefeated up to that point. (Falmouth is now 7-1.)

During the first half, the powerful defense of Buick and a goal by DeMichele contained Falmouth with the Skippers trailing 2-1 at the half. Senior co-captain Ted Goff scored on a beautiful low bounce shot in the second half, but the depth and the strength of the Falmouth team won out.

This young squad, minus three strong players faced a daunting Duxbury team on April 15. Back from vacation, they faced Sandwich on the 27th and suffered their third loss. A tightly played game against Hingham on Friday resulted in a fourth loss, but only by one goal as Travis Moore scored twice to Hingham's three balls in net.

After a strong start, Cohasset midfield couldn't contain a strong Sandwich attack and the Skippers suffered their second loss to this Cape team. A hat trick by Travis Moore wasn't enough as the Skippers faced a powerful (13-1) Marshfield team in a rescheduled game on Monday night. But Tuesday brought a convincing win against the Nantucket Whalers highlighted by six goals by Travis Moore.

Post prom party plans

The Cohasset Post Prom Committee met recently to go over planning the all-night celebration for our graduating seniors. There is still a great need for volunteers to help transform the gym into a wonderland for this magical event.

Help from anyone in the community who can give an hour or two on Friday, May 28, Saturday, May 29, or Sunday, May 30 would be appreciated. If you can set up, please call Linda Bolster (383-6148) or Betsy Connolly (383-1248). If you would like to chaperone on Friday, June 4, please call Jeanne Quigley (383-1573) or Betty O'Sullivan (383-9113).

Organizers would like to thank the following businesses, parents and community members for their raffle and/or financial donations to "The Cohasset Post Prom Party": Cohasset Hardware, Betsy and Ed Connolly, Davios, Ernest Grassey, Hingham Car Wash, Bob Moody, Staples, Jane and Ed Goff, Kathy and Ed and Kathy O'Neill, Diane Erlandson-Perkinson, Dr. Guillermo Candia, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stansell, Maryellen and Peter Maich, Myrna and George Moje.

Your donations will be accepted. Please send your contribution to The Cohasset Post Prom Party, 51 Forest Ave., Cohasset 02025.

Preschool screening slated for June 3

A special needs preschool screening for 3 and 4-year-old children will be held Thursday, June 3, between the hours of 9 a.m. and noon. The screening will take place at the Joseph Osgood School by appointment only. Our goal is to identify at an early stage those children who may be experiencing developmental delays or difficulties and could benefit from special services. Please call the student services office at 383-6104 to schedule an appointment.

'Oliver' on stage

Cohasset Plays by the Sea presents "Oliver," directed by Ron Nicynski. Musical director is Grace Gardner, choreographer, Janet Campbell.

Performances will be held at Cohasset High School, Friday and Saturday, May 28 and 29, at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, May 30, at 2:30 p.m.

Advance tickets are $6, available at Buttonwood Books, Children's Exchange, Deer Hill, Osgood, or call Irene Barry at 383-1605. Tickets are $8 at the door. General seating.

Derby summer school

Derby Academy announces that its academic summer school is open to all students in grades 2 through 12 and will begin Thursday, July 1. The program of academic and review courses runs for four weeks through July 29.

All academic summer school courses are taught by qualified and experienced faculty from Derby Academy and other area schools. Each class is limited to 10 students to maximize individual progress. Academic credit for courses may be arranged on an individual basis.

Classes are held in Hingham on the Burditt Avenue campus of Derby Academy. Selections include Study Skills I and II, designed to help students learn and study more effectively and efficiently; Reading and Writing Skills I, II and III, which use high interest material to develop reading skills and comprehension and practice the clear written expression of ideas; and Math I, II and III, which promote mastery of skills and concepts in a relaxed and supportive environment. The popular Computer Keyboarding and Word Processing course, focusing on two essential skills for today's student, touch-typing and academic report writing, will be offered again this summer. Remedial Algebra I, Geometry, and Algebra II are available on a semi-tutorial basis to meet individual needs.

For program brochure, registration forms or more information, call program director Thalia McMillion at Derby Academy (781) 740-4766.

'Dead Man Walking' author at NDA

Notre Dame Academy, announces a talk given by Sister Helen Prejean, CSJ at Notre Dame on Friday, May 28, at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free and all are welcome to attend.

Sister Helen is the author of Pulitzer Prize nominated "Dead Man Walking", which was made into an Academy Award winning movie by the same name. Sister Helen has worked extensively with death row inmates and has accompanied men to execution. While continuing her ministry on death row at Angola Prison, LA, she spends much of her energy educating the public around the world about the death penalty. She has also helped found "Survive," an advocacy group for the families of murder victims in New Orleans.

Sister Helen has been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize and has received numerous honorary degrees and awards.

For more information on this lecture or to reserve a seat, please contact the Development Office at Notre Dame Academy at (781) 740-2136.

Lesley College program in Hingham

Lesley College offers its Master of Education degree in the area of Technology in Education to Hingham and South Shore area teachers.

Lesley College will offer this 33-credit program in Hingham starting fall 1999. All courses will be offered in an intensive weekend format to accommodate working students. A three-credit course requires students to attend two weekend-long classes, with a month between weekends to work on projects and readings. A local site coordinator handles registration, orders books and serves as a liaison between the off-campus students and the main campus, located in Cambridge.

The "Technology in Education" program is geared to classroom teachers at all grade levels, and emphasizes the integration of computer software and technology into the curriculum. The program is designed for both beginners and more advanced students. The curriculum includes courses in programming, the integration of computers into curriculum areas, and emerging issues in computer education. The master's degree in Technology in Education can lead to certification as an Instructional Technology Specialist in Massachusetts.

For more information about this program, join the free information meeting Wednesday, May 19, from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. at South/East School, cafeteria. To sign up for the meeting, call Mark Doucette at Lesley College, (617) 349-8310 or 1-800-999-1959, Ext. 8310.

FOR YOUR HEALTH

Are we a nation of sleepyheads?

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

Do you get enough sleep every night? Do you wake up refreshed and ready to start your day? If not, you have more company than you may have realized.

In a 1999 nationwide survey conducted by the National Sleep Foundation (NSF:www.sleepfoundation.org), 62 percent reported having difficulty sleeping several times a week, and 40 percent feel their sleepiness compromises their daily routine. Yet only 4 percent are receiving treatment.

This problem is not just affecting adults. Sixty percent of parents surveyed said their children (under age 18) complain of fatigue during the day, and 15 percent had fallen asleep at school!

What's going on?

Sleep problems can last a night or two (when you're worried about an upcoming event), a few weeks, or be chronic. Maybe the stresses of daily life get replayed in your mind as you try to fall asleep. Perhaps you have poor sleep habits, such as going to bed at a different time every night, watching television in bed, or exercising just before bedtime. Perhaps you have a sleep disorder, a physical problem that impairs the quality of your sleep. Whatever the reason, the more "sleep-smart" we become, the better chance we have of resolving the problem.

Poor sleep habits

If you are having trouble falling asleep at night, the problem may lie in how you schedule your daily activities, and what you do before bedtime. Here are some tips to get you back on track:

•Establish a regular, realistic bedtime for yourself, based on the time you need to awaken in the morning. Move the time back 15 minutes every few days until you find a bedtime that allows you to wake up refreshed.

•Establish a bedtime routine that, over time, tells your brain and body that sleep time is approaching. Keep the routine during the weekends as well.

•Complete your exercise routine at least three hours before bedtime. Vigorous activity is stimulating, and the body needs time to unwind afterwards.

•By late afternoon, replace caffeinated beverages (this includes soda) with decaf choices.

•Nicotine and alcohol can affect your getting to sleep, as well as the quality of your sleep.

•Keep the bedroom for sleeping, not for watching television or other activities.

•An hour before bedtime, decrease the stimulation: Lower bright lights, and replace the television with reading or listening to soothing music.

•Soak in a warm bath for 15 to 20 minutes, perhaps adding a few drops of lavender to the bath water (Check out some aromatherapy books at your local library.)

•If you don't get to sleep in 30 minutes, get out of bed, go to another room and try something relaxing until you feel a bit sleepy, and then go back to bed.

Remember, poor habits developed over time. It may take some time and effort to replace your present habits with more sleep-inducing ones. A good resource is "Say Goodnight to Insomnia" by Gregg Jacobs, Ph.D. from Harvard Medical School.

Stress

Medical research is confirming what we already know: Stress is taking a huge toll on our health. Not all stress is negative: A new job, planning a vacation, or a wedding is a positive event that nonetheless can be stressful, adding more to deal with to our overloaded plates.

Much stress comes from events that are out of our control: forces of nature, illness, job issues. But ultimately, we do have control over how we manage the stresses that come our way on a daily basis.

Exercise can be a great stress-buster. If vigorous activity isn't for you, try to incorporate walking into your daily routine: perhaps a walk during lunch at work or climbing the stairwell in bad weather. For those at home with little ones, pushing the stroller around the block or the mall (in inclement weather) might work better. If they are taking a nap, perhaps that's the time for an exercise video.

Maybe a yoga or tai chi class would fit the bill. If you enjoy swimming, there are MDC and high school pools where you pay per visit. It may take some time management skills to fit it in, but over time, you will become more productive as you get a better handle on your stress. There are many mind/body techniques that are useful in combating stress. A good resource is "The Relaxation & Stress Reduction Workbook" by Davis, Eshelman and McKay.

Sleep disorders

You exercise, you have a bedtime routine, you get seven to eight hours of sleep a night, but you wake up exhausted. Does this sound familiar? If you can answer "yes" to any of the following questions, you may be suffering from a sleep disorder such as sleep apnea or periodic limb movements in sleep (PLMS):

•Do you snore (have you been told you snore)?

•Do you wake up tired?

•Are you very sleepy during the day?

•Do you wake up with a headache?

There are three forms of sleep apnea. The most common is obstructive (OSA), in which the back throat muscles and tongue relax enough to block your airway. In central sleep apnea, a relatively rare condition, the brain stops sending the message to the chest muscles and diaphragm to move, which causes breathing to stop. Because the airway is not obstructed, snoring is not usually a symptom. Mixed apnea is a combination of the two.

While snorers may be at the receiving end of many jokes, snoring can indicate OSA. During sleep, OSA sufferers may stop breathing 20 to 30 times an hour, all night long. The oxygen level drops, the carbon dioxide level rises. This impaired gas exchange triggers the brain to wake the person up and resume breathing.

Consequently, although sufferers are often unaware of such frequent awakenings, the result is severely disturbed sleep. When morning comes, the person awakens exhausted, and the cycle continues the next night.

The NSF estimates nearly 20 million Americans have OSA. It is more common in men, the elderly, and those who are overweight. Current research indicates that the oxygen deficit associated with uncorrected snoring may lead to high blood pressure and contribute to plaque formation in the neck blood vessels, increasing the risk of stroke.

If you suspect you may have OSA, talk with your physician, who may refer you to a sleep disorder evaluation program. According to Joseph Russell, director of the sleep disorder diagnosis program at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, during an overnight sleep evaluation 16 different measurements (such as brain wave activity, blood oxygen levels, number and length of apneic episodes, limb movements) are taken. The individual is monitored all night by a sleep lab technologist, and a computer records all measurements. The results are later reviewed by a pulmonologist (one who specializes in respiratory problems) and a neurologist.

In about seven to 10 days, the referring physician gets a full report (it could be even sooner if the results warrant immediate action). Some people may have what Russell refers to as "first night effect," in which they have difficulty falling asleep in the unfamiliar surroundings.

"Most people still fall asleep at some time during the test," says Russell. In other words, those measurements are still pretty indicative of what goes on at home.

What to do if the diagnosis comes back as OSA? The most common treatment is the use of a C-PAP (continuous positive air pressure) machine. A mask is fitted over the nose and room air flows through the nose to the back of the throat. The pressure of the air is enough to prevent the tongue and throat muscles from obstructing the upper airway. The person stops snoring, and breathes continuously throughout the night. By not waking during the night, the person wakes up refreshed in the morning.

A second sleep study may be ordered to evaluate the use of a C-PAP machine and determine the proper air pressure. The machine corrects the problem only when in use, so the mask needs to be worn every night to receive its benefit. Surgery, either conventional or laser, is also used to remove excess tissue from the back of the throat, or to permanently correct structural/anatomical problems.

Another sleep disorder is PLMS, or periodic limb movements in sleep.

Do you wake up with the bed covers a mess, or have you been told that you kick your feet during the night? You may have PLMS, in which leg muscles twitch or jerk off and on during sleep, at times for hours. While not a serious condition in itself, it can contribute to poor sleep during the night and fatigue during the day.

PLMS can be associated with OSA and other medical conditions. It may also be associated with restless legs syndrome (RLS), a similar leg twitching that occurs during the day, at rest. It may feel like something is crawling inside the leg, and can even be painful. Your doctor may recommend medication or may suggest a sleep study be done to gain a more complete picture of what is going on during the night.

OBITUARIES

Elizabeth Van Slyck

Elizabeth (Wilson) Van Slyck, 80, of Cohasset and Hingham, died May 3 at Harbor House Nursing and Rehab. Center, after a brief illness.

Born and raised in Newton, she graduated from Newton High School in 1938, and went on to Sargent College to study physical therapy. She graduated from Sargent in 1942. In 1943 she entered the United States Army and served as a captain with the 60th General Hospital as a physical therapist in the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign during WW II. Her decorations and citations include the WW II victory medal, the Philippine Liberation ribbon and the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign ribbon. She married her late husband Philip on V.J. Day in Manila in 1945. After her military service, she attended graduate school at Stanford University. She subsequently taught at Stanford as well as the University of Wisconsin, Tufts University, the University of Hawaii and Northeastern University.

Mrs. Van Slyck lived in Cohasset for 20 years prior to moving to Hingham 10 years ago. She was a member of the First Parish Unitarian Church in Cohasset as well as a choir member for that church. She was a member of the American Physical Therapy Association, the Stanford Alumni Association, the Easter Seal Society, and she also wrote stories of her life in the military which are being submitted to the Woman's War Memorial archives in Washington, D.C.

She leaves two children, Phyllis Van Slyck and Peter Wilson Van Slyck, both of New York City; a sister, Jane Wilson of Fla.; three grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, May 15 at 2 p.m. from the First Parish Unitarian Church, 23 North Main St., Cohasset. Visiting hours and flowers are omitted. Rather than flowers, donations may be made in her memory to the American Cancer Society, 1115 West Chestnut St., Suite 301, Brockton, MA 02401.

Interment is private. Arrangements by the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel, Hingham.

Florence L. Courtney

Florence L. (Carson) Courtney, 81, a Cohasset resident, died Sunday, May 9, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Mrs. Courtney was born in South Boston, where she was educated and lived until moving to Cohasset two years ago. She was a graduate of the Higgins Business School in Boston and was a former member of the Gate of Heaven Parish in South Boston.

She was an accomplished pianist.

Wife of the late Forrest L. Courtney, she leaves two daughters, Marilyn A. Harrington and Diane M. O'Brien, both of Hingham; two sons, Eugene J. Courtney of Edgartown and Paul V. Courtney of Hendersonville, Tenn.; a brother, Ernest Carson of Weymouth; 12 grandchildren; and 12 great-grandchildren. She was also sister of the late George Carson, Vincent Carson, Edward Carson and Evelyn Hopey.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Paul's Church, Hingham Square.

Arrangements were by the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel, Hingham. Interment was in North Weymouth Cemetery.

Rather than flowers, contributions in Mrs. Courtney's memory would be preferred to the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, P.O. Box 109, Hingham, MA 02043.

Spring programs at Second Congregational

The following programs in the Pathways to Health series will be held at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset:

May 19, 26 and June 2: "The Energetics of Healing," 7:30 to 9 p.m. A video series by Dr. Carolyn Myss. Facilitator: Susi Coley.

Beyond the threshold of your physical anatomy lies another type of anatomy, invisible to the eye, yet critical to your health. Composed of pure energy, this vast network not only determines how your body functions and heals, but also serves as a connection to divine power and all life.

In this six-week discussion series, viewing 20-30 minutes of her video each week, the group will explore Dr. Myss' fascinating guided tour of this hidden dimension of the human body. Using computer graphics created especially for this program, Dr. Myss pulls back the curtain on the body's physical anatomy to reveal its energy anatomy. Eminent domain vote for tank is tonight

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission is prepared to vote tonight on a proposal to take by eminent domain a half-acre of land on Scituate Hill for a new water tank. Unless the owner of the land, J. Michael Susi and Sons, attends the meeting prepared to negotiate, the commissioners will probably vote to seize the land, said water commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr.

"Susi's attorney told us there is nothing to discuss until after we take the land," McNabb said. "All we wanted was a counter-offer to our offer to buy the land for $32,500. If they get to us by tomorrow night with a counter-offer, we will negotiate."

The commissioners have already given Susi the legally required 30 days notice needed to take the land. If the water commissioners approve the eminent domain taking, they only have to wait for attorney Valerie Swett from town counsel's firm to record the action with the Registry of Deeds and complete the seizure. McNabb said it would take about seven days to file the taking with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds.

The commission also plans to obtain a temporary construction easement over Susi's property to build the tank.

The taking, if approved, would end the water commission's efforts to purchase the land without resorting to an eminent domain taking. Last February, the water commissioners believed they had struck a deal with Susi to purchase the land. McNabb said the commissioners had planned to purchase the half-acre of land for $32,500, based on its assessed value of $65,000 per acre. The deal also would have allowed Susi to collect 50 percent of any fees collected from telecommunications companies leasing the top of the tank for cellular telephone antennas.

If the commissioners vote to take the land, then they must follow a three-step process to build the tank. First, they must obtain a height variance from the zoning board of appeals. After getting the ZBA approval, they need site-plan approval from the planning board. Finally, the commissioners approval from the Department of Environmental Protection, a process that could take 90 days to complete.

"Valerie Swett has informed Susi's attorney that there will be no shared antenna revenues if we take the land," McNabb said. "It is illegal to do an eminent domain taking that benefits a private party."

After getting the ZBA approval, they need site-plan approval from the planning board. Finally, the commissioners approval from the Department of Environmental Protection, a process that could take 90 days to complete.

The water commission has been trying build a second water tank since 1997. The commission wanted to build the second tank on Bear H[illegible] next to the town's only other w[illegible] container. But residents living near Bear Hill vigorously opposed the proposal. The water commission settled on an alternate site on Scituate Hill.

The water commission also needs another half-acre of land for an access road and the service pipe. The water commissioners are working on a deal to build an access road on a half-acre of land located on an adjacent site owned by Paul Barry. McNabb said the Barry wants to swap the land for two connection stubs from the 12-inch pipe that would carry water from the tank to buildings. The pipe would run directly under the 20-30 foot wide access road.

New law sees first prom season

This will be the first prom season when just driving your date to the dance will be illegal for many Massachusetts high schoolers, Norfolk District Attorney William R. Keating reminded parents this week.

"Parents and high schoolers need to be aware that a driver who has been licensed less than six months cannot have passengers under age 18 without an adult in the front seat with them," Keating said. "The only exception to this new law is for members of one's immediate family — not a likely prom date."

The penalties for violating the new law are relatively stiff, Keating said, and could put a damper on what should be a memorable night. "The first violation triggers an automatic 30-day license suspension, the second a 60-day loss and each subsequent offense a three-month suspension, "Keating said.

A violation of the new law can also cause the high schooler's insurance rates to increase — just like getting a speeding ticket or having a fender-bender, according to the Massachusetts Division of Insurance.

"Many high schoolers avoid this issue by hiring limousines to bring them to the prom, but many others do not, and they need to remember that the rules have changed for this year," Keating said.

"This is a season of heightened enforcement. More police will be enforcing traffic regulations and there will be more scrutiny on young drivers as law enforcement works to prevent prom celebrations from leading to drunk driving fatalities," Keating said.

ON YOUR TEAM

The reason that chiropractic care has come to be so closely linked with both amateur and professional athletes is that they have come to recognize the value of maintaining proper skeletal alignment. Whether spinal misalignment occurs as a result of a crushing block on the football field, a fall on the basketball court, or a poor dismount from the pommel horse, it can compromise future athletic performance unless it is corrected. That is the reason that athletes seek out the services of a chiropractor after injury, and adhere to a regimen of chiropractic maintenance care as a means of injury prevention. In short, chiropractic helps to facilitate optimum athletic performance.

Chiropractic care has helped millions of people. Let us at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC help you perform your personal best. Is your spine aligned correctly? Could you benefit from professional, gentle, and safe chiropractic care without the use of drugs or surgery? Give us a call at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Our Mother's Morning Out" program can help get your families support in achieving optimum health. We have the experience and expertise to give you the care you need. Let us help you! Cohasset Heights Landfill submits DEP closure plan

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill have submitted a closure and post-closure plan to the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP). The plan is part of the legal closure process required by DEP. CHL is still negotiating with the town in closed-door sessions to work out the terms of a final closure plan.

Engineer Raymond Quinn of SITEC Environmental in Hingham prepared the proposed final closure plan for CHL. The closure plan outlines the steps CHL plans to take to close the 27.5 acre landfill and monitor the site for 30 years as required by law. CHL is proposing to complete the construction of a closure system by the fall of 1999. The construction phase may include the construction of a sand and soil cap, drainage improvements, and improved vegetation safeguards. CHL estimates the final cost of the closure plan at $1.85 million.

But John K. McNabb Jr., the person most responsible for forcing CHL to close down, believes the closure plan is far from final or adequate. McNabb pointed out that he had not yet read the plan carefully. But his initial impressions are that the plan does not present a proper closure scenario.

McNabb forced CHL to shut down after he discovered that the owners had never filed a special permit to operate that was issued in 1976. CHL unsuccessfully appealed that decision in court.

McNabb pointed to several inadequacies in the plan. CHL lists all the studies of the landfill performed over many years except for a study by Norfolk Environmental identifying water-bearing bedrock fractures under the facility. The Norfolk study indicated that contamination from the landfill was seeping through the fractures and contaminating the Lily Pond watershed.

CHL's passive gas collection system described in the closure plan needs to be replaced with an active system, McNabb said. Analysis of the situation by a health board consultant indicated the potential for noxious odors at the landfill from the gas. McNabb said there is also a large plume of explosive gas under the landfill that needs to be vented to prevent a sudden blast.

The water commission wants CHL to install diversion trenches on two sides of the landfill to divert runoff and leachate to an appropriate location, McNabb said. The closure plan does not propose trenches.

Another missing element from the plan is proper wetlands damage protection, McNabb said. The plan proposes capping the landfill in its current physical state. Last year, town officials discovered that CHL had illegally placed more than 100,000 tons of fill on the slopes of the landfill. CHL was supposed to follow a pre-determined plan that limited the amount of material on the slopes. The extra material could create the risk of a landslide of fill into nearby wetlands because the slopes are too steep. CHL's closure plan states that the vegetation on the slopes is adequate to prevent erosion.

Also, CHL placed 1,000 tons of material in a section of the facility not officially approved for landfilling. McNabb pointed out that CHL had operated illegally for its entire existence because of the lack of a special permit. McNabb said there are citizens in Cohasset who may want to initiate a legal battle to force CHL to remove all the material in the facility to some other location. Theoretically, McNabb said, CHL had always operated illegally so all the material in the facility is also illegal.

McNabb said CHL's analysis of the closure costs is much too low. McNabb said CHL signed an agreement with the town in 1996 to spend $13.94 million on closure costs: $10.98 million for transportation and disposal of underlying contamination, $500,000 for a cap, and $2.4 million for post-closure costs. Also, CHL states in the closure plan that it has started spending financial assurance funds on various work to close the landfill. But that money is supposed to remain in reserve for the entire 30 year post-closure period in case CHL fails to complete its closure plan, McNabb said.

"We're going to have to urge town counsel to check that out," McNabb said. "There's something very funny going on here. The financial assurances are way off and do not match the town's agreement from August 28, 1996."

McNabb urged residents to contact their legislators about House Bill 2384, which is an act to force DEP to conduct a public hearing with a 30 day comment period and a written comment provision about the CHL closure plan. The Legislature's Natural Resources and Agricultural Committee will hold a hearing about the bill on May 17 at 11 a.m.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET 99P0949EP
Estate of NANCY E. KNIGHT
Late of COHASSET
In the County of NORFOLK
NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that NORMAN F. KNIGHT of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executor, named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before ten o'clock in the forenoon on June 09, 1999.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this day, 4/30/1999.

Cancer can't keep Clark Chatterton down

Will speak at Relay for Life event

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

When Clark Chatterton got his first haircut in nearly a-year-and-a-half last month he gave the barber a big kiss.

"I gave him a big tip too so he really didn't mind," laughed the longtime athletic director at the middle-high school.

Chatterton's thick head of blonde hair was practically his trademark until it fell out due to chemotherapy treatments he received for bladder cancer that was diagnosed in January 1998.

But the good-natured 57-year-old didn't let cancer diminish his sense of humor or his zest for life.

It was just two years ago that, due to his association with the school and new athletic field, Chatterton was recruited to help organize the first Relay for Life at the brand new high school track. At that time, the Red Gate Lane resident had no clue a year later that he would be one of the cancer survivors, which the fund-raiser honors.

The Relay for Life began in 1985 when a Tacoma, Wash. surgeon and American Cancer Society volunteer ran and walked a local track for 24 hours. Since then, the Relay for Life has grown to be the signature event of the American Cancer Society, raising millions of dollars annually in more than 1,300 communities across the country.

This year, 24-hour event is slated for May 21-22 at Alumni Field behind the middle-high school. Once again, the Relay is expected to draw hundreds of participants who each obtain a minimum of $100 in pledges and take turns with their teammates walking laps for 24 hours. The money raised — which totaled about $45,000 last year in Cohasset — supports the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, and service to patients and their families.

The Relay for Life has grown to be the signature event of the American Cancer Society, raising millions of dollars annually in more than 1,300 communities across the country.

Opening ceremonies at 6 p.m. on Friday are followed by the survivors' "Victory Lap" and at 9 p.m., the luminaria, an emotional ceremony featuring upwards of 1,000 candles lit in memory of those who have died of the dreaded disease or in honor of those living with cancer. The candles encircle the track and stay lit through the night as walkers camp out in what resembles a tent city on the football field.

Chatterton recalls that he was one of a few members of the organizing committee for Cohasset's first Relay for Life in 1997 that hadn't had cancer. He went to about 20 meetings to help orchestrate the event which includes a myriad of tasks from recruiting teams to getting a truckload of sand for the bags that hold the candles used for the luminaria.

The following January the local chapter of the American Cancer Society presented Chatterton with a plaque to thank him for his involvement.

"They didn't have to thank me so much, that they brought me into the society," he joked about the fact his cancer was diagnosed a few weeks later.

Yet despite an 11-hour operation that February and extensive chemotherapy leading up to the event, Chatterton made it to last year's Relay for Life, which featured two teams in his honor: "Clark's Team" organized by his brother-in-law and made up of friends and family and "Chatty's Team." High school students organized the latter for Chatterton who has been a fixture at the school for 31 years.

This year Chatterton is slated to speak to the 600 participants at the opening ceremonies.

He said he will likely share an anecdote about his higher than expected tax bill this year.

"At first I was upset," Chatterton recalled. "Then I thought, 'what am I griping for?'

"I'm not complaining, I'm happy just to be here — to be able to pay taxes in 1999."

So Chatterton wrote, "Thank you, Uncle Sam!" on his check.

An unanticipated positive outcome from his experience is the increased awareness about cancer among Chatterton's colleagues at the middle-high school. He explained that upon learning about his cancer, a number of staff members went in for check ups and two were subsequently diagnosed with cancer in the early stages. Chatterton's experience also helped to get his coworkers talking about cancer and the importance of early detection.

For more information about the Cohasset Relay for Life, contact Mary Shepherd at the local American Cancer Society office at (508) 584-9600.

Special election expected to draw a crowd

Polls open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It is likely Cohasset voters will head to the polls in droves Saturday to decide whether or not to raise their taxes.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said earlier this week that voting by absentee ballot — considered a good gauge of voter turnout — is heavy. She expects that upwards of 200 absentee ballots will be cast for the special election.

The polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at town hall.

Interest in the election is high and so are emotions on both sides of the override issue.

What will be decided at the election is how much — if any tax hike — over the 2-1/2 percent allowed by state law voters will back. Then town meeting will reconvene at 7:30 p.m. Monday to vote on a budget, which will involve some cuts no matter what happens at the polls. That's because the $20.26 million "maintenance" budget approved by the annual town meeting on March 27 is in the red by some $766,000. Selectmen stressed the proposed budget maintained the status quo and contained few new initiatives. Nevertheless the override to make up the deficit failed at the April 10 town election that drew about 50 percent of the town's registered voters. Thinking the town might find a lower figure palatable, selectmen put three overrides for $612,895; $509,554 and $380,000 on the ballot this time around.

Town meeting to reconvene on Monday

There were no surprises at Monday's town meeting. As expected, the school committee presented a united front, backing the highest override while the selectmen were still deeply divided on the numbers.

About a dozen of the 392 in attendance spoke their views or asked questions of town officials.

Now it's up to the voters at Saturday's special election to decide in the privacy of the voting booth whether to raise their taxes by varying degrees through one of three overrides or not at all (see related story).

"Emotion and rhetoric can sway a vote but can't do the hard work that follows a vote."

— Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery

Few seniors take advantage of tax deferral

Incomes up to $40K qualify

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Part of Cohasset's charm is the town's small population of approximately 7,000 residents. Twenty-six percent of all the town's residents — about 1,800 people — are senior citizens who may find it difficult to cope with the town's high property tax rate. Many of those senior citizen's are eligible for the town's tax deferral program. Currently, however, only 19 senior citizens are taking advantage of the deferral. The selectmen would like to get the word out to seniors that the program is available for anyone age 65 or older with an income of less than $40,000.

The selectmen want to alert seniors to the program because only a tiny percentage of the town's senior citizens have applied for a deferral. The selectmen discussed the deferral program recently with Treasurer/Collector Joseph Buckley, who said the deferral program is one of the best money-saving options for senior citizens.

The senior citizen's tax deferral program is a boon to any older resident living on a fixed income. The program allows senior citizens who own homes to defer all or part of their property taxes until the house is sold or the title is transferred. Seniors can defer up to 50 percent of the assessed value of the home. The program is flexible, so seniors can defer all of their property taxes or just a portion, however small. The only charge for the program is an eight percent simple interest rate on all deferred taxes.

"I would like to say on behalf of many children of senior citizens that they would probably want their parents to maintain their dignity and stay in their homes as long as possible."

— Kathy Bryanton, CEA director

"I think this is a great program for seniors to participate in with ever-increasing taxes in Cohasset," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "The program is completely confidential."

Kathy Bryanton, president of the Council of Elder Affairs (CEA), said few seniors apply for a deferral because they want to leave some-

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, May 25.

Beach, RTF stickers expiring

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers will be on sale at the town hall starting Monday, May 17, and will have the following schedule: Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $80 per family, for senior citizens over 65 will now be $65 and for a single resident $40.

Permits now being issued will expire May 31, 2000.

Farmer's Market to open

The Fourth Annual Cohasset Village Farmers' Market will be getting under way this year with the ringing of the cowbell at 2:30 p.m. Thursday, June 3, on the beautiful Cohasset Common.

Fresh, locally grown produce, herbs, bedding plants, perennials, wreaths, baked goodies and breads, jams and jellies, flowers and handcrafted soaps will be available every Thursday all summer long through the middle of October.

There will be pony rides, cooking and craft demonstrations, a weekly raffle, live music and so much more!

Anyone interested in helping to sponsor the Farmers' Market, and local growers and crafters interested in participating in the market are welcome to call Jennifer Warshaw at (781) 383-6992 for more information.

Harborfest band in Memorial Day parade

Cohasset's own adult marching band will play in the 1999 Memorial Day parade, scheduled for May 31. The band will march and play three songs, and will join the Deer Hill School Band in "The Star Spangled Banner."

This past winter and spring the Harborfest Band has been practicing regularly under the direction of Steve Biagini, director of instrumental music at Deer Hill School. New members are welcome to join at any time. The band will next rehearse Monday, May 24, for the parade.

The Harborfest Band was formed in 1995 at the suggestion of the late Edward T. Atkinson, minister of First Parish, who thought it would be fun for adults to have a chance to once again be in a marching band. Since that year, the band has grown from a dozen or so members to a roster of 35-40 high school and adult musicians, some of whom, until the band was formed, had not played their marching band instruments in several years (35 years in one case). The band has played at each Harborfest parade since 1995 and most recently at the Christmas tree-lighting ceremony in December, 1998.

The band welcomes new members, high school age and up. Call Steve Biagini, c/o Deer Hill School (383-6115) or StevenB903@aol.com or Betts Murray (383-9444), Bbetts220@aol.com for further details.

Smoking variances are protested

The Drug and Alcohol Committee last week questioned the logic and legality of the Board of Health's issuance of smoking variances to Atlantica and Koko Island restaurants. Committee member Sue Cronin said that by permitting designated smoking areas within restaurants, the Board of Health has condoned "exactly what Town Meeting voters voted against."

According to a town bylaw, smoking variances may be granted only if a restaurant's survival is "financially impractical" otherwise. Referring to the as yet unopened Atlantica restaurant, committee member Pat Martin asked "how can they claim it's financially impractical before they've even opened their doors?" The Drug and Alcohol committee, which protested the variances in a letter to the health board last week, pledged to "watch the situation and make our views known."

A cause for celebration

Fundraising ignites financial turnaround for Community Center

By Brian Brennan
CORRESPONDENT

What a difference three years can make. It wasn't that long ago that the South Shore Community Center on North Main Street had trouble paying its electric bills and nearly had to close its doors. Fast forward three years. This past Sunday, leaders at the community center celebrated a momentous occasion with a ceremonial "burning" of its mortgage.

The center's mortgage-burning ceremony honored the hard work and vision of those whose fund-raising efforts were instrumental in allowing the center to pay off the $72,000 mortgage and business loan which was taken out in 1983 to pay for an expansion of the facility. The collective joy of those involved in the fund-raising effort was voiced by Mary Larson, a member of the SSCC Board of Directors, who spearheaded the campaign to pay off the mortgage back in 1996.

"I feel like this is my 'I have a dream' speech," Larson said to the gathering of those who donated toward the goal of paying off the center's mortgage. It was a dream that seemed hopeful at best three years ago, when Larson joined the board at the request of fellow member Susan DiPesa, at a time when the center was having financial challenges.

Larson kicked off the fund-raising effort by organizing a letter-writing campaign designed to let SSCC members know of the center's dire financial straits. "The letter outlined the services and programs that the center provides and explained the need to bring the center up to safety codes and go into the millennium debt-free," she said.

That initial letter raised $45,000 and Larson held a dinner at her home this February in celebration of that accomplishment. "At that dinner, a number of people indicated they were going to donate even more," she said. "We followed that up with another letter to let people know how close we were to reaching the goal, and that put us over the top."

Larson added that she had a great deal of help in the fund-raising campaign. She said that DiPesa and Matt Galligan, who have both served as president of the center's board of directors during the campaign, were instrumental toward its ultimate success.

"They were both committed and full of energy," Larson said of DiPesa and Galligan. "Their commitment inspired others to help."

In the end, Larson indicated it was a group effort that enabled the center to escape its debtor status.

"It took the work of some incredibly effective, millennium-inspired people to get it done," she said. "It is tremendously uplifting for people to be part of something that was achieved. So many times people donate money toward a cause and nothing comes of it. It is one of the most fulfilling and exciting things I've done in Cohasset."

"It took the work of some incredibly effective, millennium-inspired people to get it done."
— Mary Larson of the community center

The community center, which does not receive federal, state, or municipal funding, offers a wide range of services with programs geared toward diverse age groups and interests. "We have programs for the very young, even for children as young as 9 months old, such as Gym Dandy," Stephanie Church of the SSCC said of the program designed to improve the social and motor skills of young children.. "We also have a senior center, where we serve meals twice a week and have exercise programs and other activities for senior citizens."

The community center also offers a variety of classes encompassing such topics as dance, gourmet cooking, computers, tai chi, and evaluating mutual funds. "We really do have something for everyone," Church said.

Community center board president Matt Galligan torches the mortgage Sunday morning to celebrate the center's debt-free status as Stephanie Church looks on.

Larson said though the recent fund-raising success has been exciting, the vision for the community center began years before. The center's past was represented by Frances Wakeman and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, daughters of SSCC founders J. Franklin McElwain and Nathaniel Hurwitz, respectively, who opened the facility in 1943.

Murray said her father and McElwain shared a similar ideal as far as how each felt about Cohasset. "Mr. McElwain was like my dad," Murray said. "They both were committed to the town and especially to the youth of the town. They had openings for films and pool tables and everything was geared toward giving kids a place to go."

Murray also read a citation from the Massachusetts House of Representatives in recognition of all the work done to pay off the center's mortgage.

Wakeman, a major benefactor to SSCC, then participated in the ceremonial burning of a replica of the mortgage along with Galligan, and a light-hearted moment ensued as the wind played havoc with their attempt to light the mortgage.

"I think it was easier to raise the money," Larson quipped after the burning was finally complete.

Larson added that though the center is now solvent, much work still needs to be done to ensure its place in the community's future. "This campaign is not the end of the road," she said. "Every dollar you give means it will be a more benevolent future for our children"

Few takers for tax deferral

thing for their children after they die.

"Many seniors are concerned about leaving a legacy and they want to leave the house to their children," Bryanton said. "There is definitely a stigma attached to this program by many senior citizens. They are afraid they'll have nothing to leave their children."

Children who inherit properties from parents who participated in the program must pay the property tax bill when they assume ownership of the home. Seniors who decide to sell their homes must pay any deferred taxes when the sale is completed.

Bryanton said she is confident that most people with elderly parents in Cohasset would like to see their parents living independently rather than worrying about a legacy.

"We have many residents who have lived in town for 40, 50, 60, even 70 years or more," Bryanton said. "I would like to say on behalf of many children of senior citizens that they would probably want their parents to maintain their dignity and stay in their homes as long as possible."

Bryanton said the deferral program is important because there are few alternative housing options available in Cohasset. She pointed out that many senior citizens leave Cohasset to find more affordable housing elsewhere on the South Shore. Bryanton added that keeping seniors in town is also an important way of preserving local history.

"When I see a person 95-years-old having lunch with a third-grader, I see living history," Bryanton said. "Many of our seniors helped build this town. They've supported the schools; they've supported education; they've supported well-maintained municipal services. We need to keep our seniors here because that maintains a strong sense of community."

Bryanton said the town needs to make every effort to reach out to senior citizens and help them understand the deferral program. Most seniors don't apply for a deferral until they are facing a financial crisis, Bryanton said. She hopes the town will make every effort to reach seniors before they are facing financial crises.

"There is no stigma to this program," Bryanton said. "This is a way of preserving our town. It is completely confidential, so no one knows who is participating."

Senior citizens interested in the program should contact the assessors office at 383-4114.

Quick work saves local man's life

Heart attack victim is doing well

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The day started off like any other at work for Joe Gagne.

But by 9:15 a.m. April 23 that had all changed when the 6'3" familiar figure at Curtis Liquors where he serves as co-manager collapsed with a heart attack.

But thanks to a little luck and a lot of teamwork by Cohasset call and permanent firefighters, Gagne is here to tell the tale of his brush with death.

"I was flat-line dead," Gagne said in a telephone interview from his home in Hull about the incident.

Help started with a 9-1-1 call by a cashier who heard Gagne fall on the floor in the office where he was doing paperwork, according to Peter Logan, line manager at Curtis Liquors.

Luckily Ian Fitzpatrick, a call firefighter, who also works at the liquor store as a receiver, was out back.

And Rich Bonanno, another Cohasset call firefighter, was just pulling out of the Exxon station a few hundred yards up the street when he heard the medical call on his pager.

"We not supposed to respond to medical calls," Bonanno said about the service provided by the call department. "But I thought being so close, I might be of some help."

"I was flat-line dead."
— Joe Gagne

Bonanno, who is an EMT instructor and carries a complete medical kit in his car, said Gagne was in respiratory and cardiac arrest.

"For all practical purposes, he was dead on the floor," he said.

Bonanno, who coincidentally is Fitzpatrick's instructor at EMT school, and Fitzpatrick worked as a team performing CPR and using a special bag to get oxygen into Gagne's lungs for about four minutes until the ambulance arrived.

At that point paramedic Laura Morrison and firefighter/EMT Matthew Marr took over the scene. They hooked Gagne up to oxygen and used the defibrillator to get his heart rhythm back.

"He was defibrillated into a rhythm that sustains life and did well going to the hospital," Morrison said.

Bonanno said he was happy to be close to the scene.

"I was one link of a very long chain that helped this guy survive. The chain starts with the person who makes the 9-1-1 call because time is of the essence," he said.

Bonanno went to visit Gagne at home four days later. Gagne underwent surgery at Beth Israel Hospital to repair the arteries leading to his heart.

"He was walking and talking, there was no neurological damage because he was not without oxygen and the CPR was done early," Bonanno said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln praised the team effort.

"Early intervention by the call firefighters made a difference and the arrival of the two EMTs with the defibrillator played a large part in his survival," he said.

Meanwhile Gagne is happy to be alive and anxious to get back to work. He's grateful all the players seemed to be at the right place at the right time when he was stricken.

"God must have said, 'we don't want him, don't send him,'" Gagne laughed.

Permit snafu won't stop election

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Saturday's election will go ahead as scheduled despite an error involving use of a school department bulk mailing permit by a private organization.

He explained that the Committee for Quality Town Services (CQTS), a political action committee, used a school department bulk mailing permit to send out a town-wide mailing that arrived in mailboxes Wednesday.

The postage was paid directly by the Committee for Quality Town Services to the US government and there were no expenses incurred by the town of Cohasset.
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"I spoke with the town counsel's office which contacted the secretary of state and this action will not invalidate the election," Haddad explained.

He said a complaint has been filed with the state campaign finance office. The town treasurer will file a form that says a public resource had inadvertently been used, specifically a bulk mail permit of the school committee, Haddad said, when another permit was available.

The postage was paid directly by the Committee for Quality Town Services to the US government and there were no expenses incurred by the town of Cohasset, Haddad said.

"This inadvertent use should not be interpreted as an attempt by the school committee to influence the election as it was not authorized by the school committee," Haddad said.

Rob Spofford, spokesman for CQTS said the group thought it had the PSO bulk mailing permit number correct when the flyers were printed and didn't realize the error until the flyers were taken to the post office. The PSO is a private school booster organization.

"At no time did we go down with the school number to try and slip this through," Spofford said. "We wrote a check right then and there and paid the higher not-for-profit rate.

"It is a harmless error and it is really a shame that it has become an issue here."

Route 3A tower plan is still raising concerns

Large abutter turnout expected at tonight's meeting

By Frank DiCesare
STAFF WRITER

A proposal to build a 180-foot cell tower near the Scituate-Cohasset line has raised the ire of residents in both towns.

For the second time in five weeks, opponents of the project will be given a chance to air their concerns publicly when the Scituate Planning Board meets tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Abutters concerns about the tower range from its impact on property values and public safety to aesthetics.

"It's going to change the visual character of our neighborhoods, both on the Gannet side and the Ledgewood side," said Cohasset resident John Donohue. "It's going to be like living in New London looking out at submarines."

Proposed for a parcel of land adjacent to Cohasset Collision Center, the communication tower will be set back 134 feet from Route 3A, according to Scituate Town Planner Laura Harbottle. Its size could serve a maximum number of six cellular or personal communication services which could use as many as 12 antennas on large triangular brackets. The applicant, Tower Ventures of Providence R.I., plans to build a stockade fence around the tower's base to hide four tower storage buildings. Three of these "pads" would be 10 X 20 square-foot buildings, the fourth would be an 8 X 10 square-foot structure. The pads would serve as shelters in which communication companies would store their battery packs and transmitting equipment, Harbottle said. According to Tower Ventures representatives, both AT&T and Cellular One have already voiced interest in locating their equipment at the proposed site.

"We were unaware that anything like this was on the table. Now we are playing catch-up ball. If it wasn't for our neighbors in Scituate we would not have been notified."
COHASSET RESIDENT JOHN DONAHUE

Harbottle said Tower Ventures and co-applicant, Omnipoint Communications of Providence R.I., will need to present figures on the tower's wind resistance and clarify its fall zone — concerns abutters and residents from both towns raised at last month's meeting.

Developer Stephen Bjorklund, vice president of King K. Corporation of Duxbury — the company which owns the 400 square-foot lot where the tower would be built — said its wind resistance and radial ice figures meet both Norfolk and Plymouth County's regulations.

"Norfolk County's regulation has a maximum 90 mile per hour wind velocity with a half-inch of radial ice," Bjorklund said. "Plymouth County has a 95 mile per hour wind velocity with a half inch of radial ice. Our tower will be designed to withstand winds in excess of the Norfolk and Plymouth County regulations and collect a half-inch of radial ice."

Bjorklund also spoke to concerns about the tower falling and possibly damaging nearby homes.

If tower is to collapse it would do so at its 120-foot mark and fold over onto its intact base, Bjorklund said, adding that a 180-foot tower has never toppled from the bottom.

The town's consulting engineer, David Maxson, managing partner of Broadcast Signal Lab LLP of Cambridge, said cell towers are no more of a safety concern than other structures in a community.

"These tower are built to very rigorous standards," Maxson said.

"When you see photos of towers which have collapsed they are usually accompanied by photos of homes which have been destroyed by the same weather."

Residents also raised concerns about the tower's affect on public health and the environment.

"When Scituate changed the zoning for that area, Cohasset should have come to town meeting and asked the town to pull it back as far as they wanted. I personally don't know anyone in the world who wants a tower but there are going to be towers."
DEVELOPER STEPHEN BJORKLUND

"Residents have pointed to such health risks as brain tumors, miscarriages, cataracts, and problems with pacemakers" she said.

But Maxson said the radio signals reaching the public from the proposed tower would be hundreds, perhaps, thousands of times lower than the amounts federal safety standards allow.

Donohue said residents from both towns are also taking issue with the lack of notification they received about the tower proposal and the public hearings.

"We were unaware that anything like this was on the table," Donohue said. "Now we are playing catch-up ball. If it wasn't for our neighbors in Scituate we would not have been notified."

According to Donohue, the state's cell tower bylaws requires builders notify abutters within a week of a balloon test to show the tower's height. Once the test is completed, Donohue said, abutters are given 90 days to draft their opinions. Donohue said he and the other area abutters were only notified of one of the three balloon tests the morning it took place.

Scituate's annual town meeting last year approved a wireless communication overlay district which runs from the Cohasset line to Tack Factory Pond on Route 3A. The proposed tower would lie within that district. Bjorklund said he heard no opposition from Cohasset residents when the district was approved.

"When Scituate changed the zoning for that area, Cohasset should have come to town meeting and asked the town to pull it back as far as they wanted," Bjorklund said. "I personally don't know anyone in the world who wants a tower but there are going to be towers."

Planning board chairman William Limbacher said the overlay district bylaw was created to protect residents to ensure compliance with Federal Communication Commission directives.

Bjorklund said he hopes the planning board closes the hearing tonight.

But for residents like Donohue the matter is far from being resolved.

"We have 100 signatures from Scituate and Cohasset we collected this weekend," he said. "If we have the opportunity I believe we can collect more. As much as anything else we hope to keep the issue going. We're willing to go as far as we have to go."

THINKING ABOUT VOTING NO?
GET THE FACTS!

MYTH:
A YES vote on question 1a, 1b & 1c will pay for items such as air conditioning and other extraordinary costs.

FACT
The override vote on Saturday has nothing to do with instituting new capital projects of paying for past infrastructure improvements. This vote is solely to maintain our quality town services and protect valuable educational programs that contribute to the success of our town and our school system.

MYTH:
If you vote YES, YES, YES you are approving all three overrides in total.

FACT
The override questions are not cumulative. If you vote YES on all three, only one question will be adopted by Town Meeting. We are asking people to vote YES, YES, YES on all three to protect the town from having to make devastating cuts if no override is approved.

MYTH:
A YES vote will support a school system that overpays its teachers.

FACT
With the ratification of their new contract, Cohasset teaching salaries will be brought up to the average of Norwell, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Hanover.

MYTH:
The override vote only affects the schools.

FACT
Voting NO means many of our critical town services will be slashed or put into jeopardy including Police, Fire, Water, Elder Services, Library Staff, Town Maintainence, Teen Programs and Nursing Services.

PROUD GRANDMOTHER

A few weeks ago we told you all about the birth of Meghan Leigh Snowdale (remember? Meghan is the first Snowdale born in 70 years...). Well, Meghan, we owe your other grandmother, Norma Snowdale, an apology as we omitted her name from your list of relatives! Sooo sorry! By now we're sure you probably know and love her, so we hope all is forgiven!

RELAY FOR LIFE

More news about the Relay For Life, and this is for all of you cancer survivors — you are invited to walk the Honorary Lap of Cancer Survivors at the American Cancer Society's third annual Relay for Life at Cohasset High School (at the track on Alumni Field) Friday, May 21, at 6 p.m. There will be a special reception in your honor at 5 p.m. sponsored by Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. You don't have to be on a team or raise money to be part of the Survivor's Lap — and, invite any fellow survivors you know to join as well! Your courage is applauded, as are your accomplishments in your battle against cancer, and they would like to take this chance to celebrate life and you!

Once again, if you would like to get more involved, or if you would like more information, please call Mary Shepherd at the local American Cancer Society. Her number is (508) 584-9600.

One more note on the Relay for Life event, a wonderful one indeed!! Atlantica is sponsoring the Relay for Life thanks to the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Roy, isn't that wonderful?!!

Speaking of Atlantica and Mr. and Mrs. Roy, everyone is talking about how wonderful it looks, and all are anticipating a spectacular meal when it opens. In this case, all are of the opinion that you can tell a book by its cover! It's beautiful, inside and out, and we wish all the best to Atlantica — and thank the Roys for putting Cohasset Harbor "back on the map."

BIRTHDAY WISHES

There are lots of birthdays in May, if you see any of these wonderful folks don't forget to wish them a happy day — Jean Doble, John Atkinson, Ann Pompeo, Corinne Cahill, Paula Cuneo, Jean Higgins, Amy Cutler, Edna Finegan, and Dr. Wayne DeWald. Hope that your special day is (or was) a special one!

MARY GRASSIE

The Memorial Day Parade won't be the same without Mary Grassie waving from one of the convertibles — it saddened us to learn of her passing last week, she was a true Cohasset legend. She was thoughtful, helpful and kind, always with a ready smile. She will be missed!

It's an active and busy group, serving you and the community. Connie Zanoni and Patti Keville are the membership committee, call either of them with any questions you might have (383-1288 or 383-1200)

LITTLE LEAGUE UNDER WAY

Have you been to the Harold Barnes Field to watch a Little League game yet? If not, so go!! It's so much fun to watch the various teams compete! The field looks like Fenway, it's so well maintained; "Captain" Morgan and Marsha will even prepare your little ones a meal that they will love; hot dogs, fries, burgers, goodies. .they love it! And they love to watch the game! And the players love an audience! So, go watch a bunch of kiddos play ball and enjoy!!

SHARE YOUR NEWS

That's the news for this week; now come on and let us in on yours — this is the time of year that news abounds, share it!!

Give me a call (383-0560) or drop me a line (9 Red Gate Lane), tell me your news and I'll do the rest! One note though, my deadline is the Friday (8 a.m.) before the issue comes out — in other words, if you want an article to appear that has a specific date, it has to be in a week before. Hope that helps!

Community cookout following Memorial Day parade

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day parade, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the third year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of its supporters during renovation, and it expects to serve about 1000 people again.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Getting our priorities straight

If you don't do anything else before Saturday's vote, please read letter by the Rev. Clifford Cutler and Nancy St. John this week.

Theirs are voices of reason amid all the acrimony that the override issue has caused in town.

It's time for all of us to take a step back and realize what's really important in life.

To paraphrase Selectman Tom Callahan, the sky won't fall regardless of what happens Saturday at the polls.

The override issue involves money, not life or death. Two stories we've written over the past two weeks drove that issue home for us.

Last week, Clark Chatterton who has taught in Cohasset for 31 years, talked about how, at first, he was upset at his income tax bill this year. Then the cancer survivor thought why should he gripe, he's just happy to be here and to be able to pay taxes in 1999.

Then this week, we wrote about Joe Gagne, who is a familiar figure to anyone who shops at Curtis Liquors. The 6'3" co-manager was stricken recently with a heart attack that very nearly cost him his life. Luckily, a couple of call firefighters were nearby and provided life-saving CPR until the EMTs arrived a few minutes later. Today, Mr. Gagne is grateful to be alive and anxious to get back to work.

We think that most of you have your minds made up on how you plan to vote on Saturday. We believe those who oppose the overrides care as much about the town as those who support them. So the important thing to do is vote your conscience — what you think is best for your family and your town. Casting an informed vote and participating in the process is our duty as citizens.

We also have an obligation in a democracy to tolerate opposing views. While we understand the passion on both sides, we challenge everyone to be civil on Saturday and to realize no matter what, we are one town and we are in this together.

As advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said at Monday's town meeting, the hard work begins after the vote. That's when we all have to muddle in together and decide where we want Cohasset to go as we embark on the 21st century and how we plan to get there.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Respect those who disagree

TO THE EDITOR:

We have recognized an adversarial tone to much of town discussion over the last few years and worry about its impact on children. We work with children on issues of character education through the Deer Hill School and in the Christian education program at Saint Stephen's. We try hard to teach children values of respect, tolerance, compassion, and what it means to live in community. It is jarring to leave one of these groups where the discussion is about getting along and then hear divisive contention among adults, whether it is between people who have lived in town a long time and newcomers, or between various committees of the town, or between those who favor overrides and those who don't. If we feel jarred by adult polemics, then what effect can this have on the children themselves? Children soak up what they see and hear around them like a sponge. If they are taking in aggression and contentiousness it cannot help but diminish their moral capacity. On the other hand that moral character is enhanced if children see their parents and others struggle with self-discipline, kindness, and service. As responsible adults and leaders of the town we have an obligation to try to set the right example of how to live in community.

There are values on which each of us spends a lifetime working. While no one is perfect, we each need to listen for understanding. Every person has many gifts of insight and life experience to be offered in a discussion. As a town we can become much more than the sum of our individual contributions when we work together even with differing points of view to resolve the difficulties before us. We need the humility to realize we might be wrong, and the patience to understand that even when we are right it may take time for our ideas to "germinate" in others' lives. We need to respect those who disagree with us and work on forgiveness of ourselves when we fall short of the best in us and of others when we feel wronged. If we can work at these values even though we won't succeed 100 percent of the time, then imagine the lessons our children will learn, and how our town might be changed in ways that benefit all.

The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler

Nancy St. John

Church School Coordinator

Behavior is appalling

TO THE EDITOR:

This override campaign has been long, tedious and frustrating, and while opinions are strong on both sides, it is appalling to witness the behavior of many people in this town. The cynical overtones and tongue lashings have reduced this campaign to one of disgrace and embarrassment.

The bottom line is that we all want what is best for the town. It is apparent that 2 1/2 cannot continue to sustain this town year after year, thus presenting us with the need for an override. The school committee has explained in detail why it needs to increase its budget and they have reiterated over and over what we stand to lose if it should fail.

I cannot understand how we could allow this to happen...look at what we've got here and look at what we could lose if we allow mediocrity in our school system. We have for the most part a faculty that we are very proud of - they need to be paid accordingly. We are only asking that the teachers be paid comparable salaries to neighboring towns. Many feel it is not the time to raise salaries, however, when might that time be? Others claim it would be acceptable to increase class size, an unrealistic and out of touch statement in my opinion.

The teacher and school bashing that is consistently heard in this town is very tiresome, unproductive, and damaging. Those actually involved in our system realize what a strong system it is, and how lucky we are to have such strong and caring faculty members. The school system may not be for everyone, no system is. However, to say the system is not working is an inaccurate statement exemplified by our MCAS scores, SAT scores, and college placements. As for Lee Jenkin's comment in the Globe that she would not send her children through the system again is easy to say now that they have already successfully gone through it. Their academic success is apparent by the colleges they attend. Perhaps they achieved this entirely on their own, but perhaps the school can take some credit too.

We all have a vested interest in this town and it is crucial that we look at this situation critical and carefully so that we can make the best decision for this town. Cohasset continues to remain a very popular and desirable place to live - this will only continue to happen if we can boast a strong and vital school system Without this we will fail to attract young families and we may fail to keep the ones we now have.

From dump to RTF (Recycling Transfer Facility)

(A newsletter created by a volunteer staff and issued periodically by the Cohasset Recycling Committee)

Second in a series, here, as they say. Welcome again to the Cohasset Recycling Committee's new format, an attempt to better communications on this far-reaching (because expensive!) issue of handling all this stuff in such an advanced capitalistic society. We love to shop! We also love to eat; and we have more "things" than any other nation today.

Speaking of history: America has been, for some time now, the great throwaway society. The settlers and the pioneers had to be frugal to survive, but it wasn't long before Americans realized that this was indeed a bountiful country, a big one, with lots of space, lots of space in which to throw things away, and dumps were out of sight in more ways than one for quite a while. It was only several decades ago that this writer heard a fellow refer to the street, for example, as he emptied his ashtray out of his car window, as "The Big Ashtray." Fortunately this mentality of the planet as The Big Ashtray is receding, but only because of a public outcry for decency — and for economic as well as aesthetic/moral reasons.

It's still easy to refer to the RTF as the dump. But it's not a dump any longer. Our facility on Cedar Street collects, sorts, and then transfers everything we "throw out" to proper facilities where it is recycled either through regeneration or through incineration. Such an operation has to be because of the expanding population — and the expense and finiteness of our resources unthought of by the settlers and pioneers and subsequent builders. And our privileged American society, with 4 percent of the world's population, uses 30 percent of the world's resources. Each man, woman, and child in the U.S. creates 1/2 ton of trash a year — 1,000 pounds for each of us, every 365 days, according to the EPA, in 1995, the amount of 4.3 pounds per person per day. Though we should morally lead the way in the stewardship of these resources, we really do not. Some smaller countries and countries that have had extensive wars on their soil, for example, are considerably more advanced than we are in recycling technology.

Enough lecture for today! Yet to come: articles on Cohasset schools and recycling, brush disposal, which batteries can be recycled, South Shore recycling organizations, plastics by the numbers, mixing cardboards and brown bags, the fascinating world of composting and much, much more! See you next time.

Cohasset stands at a crossroad

MY VIEW

MARK DEGIACOMO

This week Cohasset stands at a crossroad. The road we choose will determine whether we maintain our top quality school system or whether we allow that system to slip away. The reason we find ourselves at this crossroad has nothing to do with the Selectmen, the School Committee, teachers, parents or our senior citizens. We are at this crossroad solely because of the horribly inadequate funding this town receives from the state government. Because we are viewed as an affluent community, we are being discriminated against when it comes to receiving our fair share of funding. Funding formulas are set by the state without regard to the fact that over ninety percent of our real estate is residential or the fact that we are currently in the process of paying for major sewer projects. But even if we were to get our fair share, the assistance provided by Massachusetts to its cities and towns is still grossly inadequate. For example, while other states reimburse their school districts over 50% of their special education costs, Massachusetts reimburses its cities and towns an average of only 16%. Cohasset receives less than that. Another example of inadequate funding is the Metco program. This program, which does so much for the children that come into our school system and for our children, has been level funded for many years meaning that the cost for our school district has steadily increased.
